

Iraq agrees to rescind annexation of Kuwait and pay reparations but US increases pressure

Allies reject Saddam's latest offer as noose tightens around his forces

By PETER STOTHEARD IN WASHINGTON AND OUR FOREIGN STAFF

THE allies yesterday rejected Iraq's latest offer to end the Gulf war, saying that even the unconditional acceptance of all 12 UN resolutions might not be enough to call off the ruff of President Saddam Hussein's forces.

The Iraqi foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, has written to the UN agreeing to rescind the annexation of Kuwait and to pay war reparations in return for a ceasefire and an end to sanctions.

But as the allied forces tightened the noose around the remnants of Saddam's army, President Bush insisted that the offer still fell far short of what was required. Mr Bush has demanded that Saddam personally and publicly accept all of the resolutions, and yesterday he increased the pressure aimed at achieving an unconditional surrender.

First, the administration signalled that Iraq would have to attend a "settlement meeting" at the UN to clarify some new contentious issues. These are thought to include the return of gold and other hard currency assets looted from Kuwait, and the expansion of the definition of prisoners of war to encompass Kuwaiti detainees seized by the fleeing Iraqi forces.

The White House also said last night that Iraq's post-war military strength must be reduced on the assumption that Saddam would remain in power after the war. There were indications in the allied seating of the western flank of the war zone that they intended to demilitarise southern Iraq, although there was no intention to take the war to Baghdad.

General Norman Schwarzkopf, the allied commander, said yesterday that allied forces were at one point within 150 miles of the Iraqi capital and could have taken it virtually without opposition had that been a war aim.

General Schwarzkopf said in Riyadh that the Republican Guard divisions in southern Iraq were surrounded. "The gates are closed. There are no ways out," he said. The allied ground offensive had rendered ineffective 29 Iraqi divisions. More than three-quarters of the enemy's 4,000 tanks had been destroyed. Two-thirds of its artillery pieces were gone. More than 50,000 prisoners had been taken.

All of this had been achieved with "miraculously" low casualties. The allies yesterday put the figure at about 90 dead, including nine British soldiers killed by an American attack aircraft on Tuesday.

Kuwait City was yesterday declared free as the coalition forces rolled into the city and reclaimed their national embassies. The British ambassador, Michael Weston, will return this week.

Elsewhere in Kuwait, there were only pockets of resistance. But in Iraq, hundreds of tanks from the US 7th Armoured Corps were involved in fierce fighting with a Republican Guard tank division that tried to break through an allied cordon and flee northwards. At least 57 Iraqi T72 tanks had been destroyed in the clashes west of Basra, American defence officials said.

Other officials said British, French and American armoured units were also fighting Republican Guard divisions on a long-curved front from a point west-southwest of Basra into Kuwait.

Baghdad radio yesterday said the enemy coalition had interfered in the withdrawal of our forces and demonstrated all his cowardly, mean and lowly characteristics while trying to harm our units". The complaint came as it broadcast the details of Mr Aziz's letter to the UN, which said that Iraq would give up its

Kuwait's return	2
Front line reports	3
British casualties	4
Postwar planning	5
Spoils of war	12
Leading article	13
Letters	13
Oil price	23

claim to Kuwait and release all prisoners of war in a short time once a ceasefire was declared and all allied and sea operations were halted.

The Iraqi ambassador to the UN, Abdul al-Anbari, said in New York that Iraq was willing to comply with all remaining security council resolutions. The last soldier had left Kuwait at dawn, he said, so that those resolutions imposing sanctions were no longer necessary. It was up to the security council to rescind those, he said.

He rejected suggestions that the offer was conditional, saying: "Unless you are alive you cannot walk, so don't tell me that it's a condition to be alive in order to walk. You cannot implement resolutions without a ceasefire."

Mr al-Anbari said he was asking for a security council meeting to declare a ceasefire, but that meeting was delayed last night while members awaited a proper translation of Mr Aziz's letter. The State Department in Washington said, however, that all five permanent members of the security council had agreed that the latest offer was inadequate.

The White House spokesman, Martin Fitzwater, said that President Bush wanted the shooting to stop as soon as militarily possible, "but this is still a conditional offer and falls far short of what is necessary."

Washington is determined that the resolutions retaining sanctions on Iraq be maintained. The power to curb Saddam's post-war ability to buy arms is considered critical. Future security arrangements were at the centre of talks yesterday between Mr Bush and the British foreign secretary, Douglas Hurd. The president's meetings with the French and German foreign ministers later this week are also expected to address the post-war period.

The White House said that its aim was to reduce the post-war military strength of Iraq. "Assuming that Saddam Hussein stays in power, and assuming the UN resolutions are met, that would require we continue this effort to degrade his military structure," Mr Fitzwater said. Pentagon officials said that the pursuit and destruction of the Iraqi army would continue.

General Schwarzkopf, the US commander-in-chief in the Gulf, announced last night that there were just two Republican Guard divisions left to deal with after three days of the land campaign to liberate Kuwait.

After a massive flanking manoeuvre, carried out while the Iraqis were expecting an amphibious landing from the opposite direction, Iraq's armoured capability had been almost eliminated. All that remained in Iraq were infantry divisions, he said, which would not pose the same threat to the region in the future.

General Schwarzkopf, in his most outspoken briefing so far, gave a tour d'horizon of the land campaign. He admitted that if he had thought the battle would have lasted such a short time he would never have provided the Operation Desert Storm forces with 60 days' supplies.

He dismissed President Saddam Hussein's leadership, saying that he was not good at tactics, he had not been schooled in the "operational art" and he was neither a general nor a soldier.

He also said Iraqi soldiers had not put up a fight because they did not have a cause to believe in, nor a leader they followed. When execution squads were sent to the front line to shoot soldiers who tried to desert, that gave a clear indication that the Iraqi leadership had failed. General Schwarzkopf said the American, British and French divisions had cut off all escape for Iraq's army. "The gates are closed... there are no ways out," he said.

Five Republican Guard divisions had been confronted. One had been put out of action and two more would be in that position by yesterday, he said. That left two more divisions. General Schwarzkopf said he was not trying to destroy the Republican Guard, he just wanted their tanks and equipment.

Constant psychological operations were being conducted to try to persuade the Republican Guards to leave their tanks. If they fought on, however, they would be attacked, he said.

The general also emphasised that it was not his mission to conquer Iraq or to go to Baghdad. At one stage, US 101st Airborne Division troops had been within 150 miles of Baghdad and they could have headed unopposed to the capital. "There was no one between us and Baghdad," General Schwarzkopf said. However there was no intention of going to Baghdad.

Giving the first detailed briefing of the allied strategy, he said the Iraqis had been fooled into believing a major amphibious assault on Kuwait was planned. Other troops were positioned directly south of Kuwait to make the Iraqis think the main assault would come from there.

Once the Iraqi air force had been neutralised and could no longer see the allied units, they were moved west where they could outflank Iraq's defensive barrier in southern Kuwait. Allied units then launched long-range flanking

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

For this relief: a Kuwaiti citizen raising his arms in celebration yesterday as a Saudi personnel carrier rolls into a liberated Kuwait City

How we won the war, by General Schwarzkopf

By MICHAEL EVANS, DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

GENERAL NORMAN SCHWARZKOPF, the US commander-in-chief in the Gulf, announced last night that there were just two Republican Guard divisions left to deal with after three days of the land campaign to liberate Kuwait.

After a massive flanking manoeuvre, carried out while the Iraqis were expecting an amphibious landing from the opposite direction, Iraq's armoured capability had been almost eliminated. All that remained in Iraq were infantry divisions, he said, which would not pose the same threat to the region in the future.

General Schwarzkopf, in his most outspoken briefing so far, gave a tour d'horizon of the land campaign. He admitted that if he had thought the battle would have lasted such a short time he would never have provided the Operation Desert Storm forces with 60 days' supplies.

He dismissed President Saddam Hussein's leadership, saying that he was not good at tactics, he had not been schooled in the "operational art" and he was neither a general nor a soldier.

He also said Iraqi soldiers had not put up a fight because they did not have a cause to believe in, nor a leader they followed. When execution squads were sent to the front line to shoot soldiers who tried to desert, that gave a clear indication that the Iraqi leadership had failed.

General Schwarzkopf said the American, British and French divisions had cut off all escape for Iraq's army. "The gates are closed... there are no ways out," he said.

Five Republican Guard divisions had been confronted. One had been put out of action and two more would be in that position by yesterday, he said. That left two more divisions. General Schwarzkopf said he was not trying to destroy the Republican Guard, he just wanted their tanks and equipment.

Constant psychological operations were being conducted to try to persuade the Republican Guards to leave their tanks. If they fought on, however, they would be attacked, he said.

The general also emphasised that it was not his mission to conquer Iraq or to go to Baghdad. At one stage, US 101st Airborne Division troops had been within 150 miles of Baghdad and they could have headed unopposed to the capital. "There was no one between us and Baghdad," General Schwarzkopf said. However there was no intention of going to Baghdad.

Giving the first detailed briefing of the allied strategy, he said the Iraqis had been fooled into believing a major amphibious assault on Kuwait was planned. Other troops were positioned directly south of Kuwait to make the Iraqis think the main assault would come from there.

Once the Iraqi air force had been neutralised and could no longer see the allied units, they were moved west where they could outflank Iraq's defensive barrier in southern Kuwait. Allied units then launched long-range flanking

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Continued on page 22, col 4

Nine Britons die in 'friendly fire'

By OUR DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

NINE British soldiers killed in the first tank battle involving the Desert Rats, died in a "friendly fire" incident after being hit by anti-tank shells launched from an American A10 Thunderbolt.

The A10 had been called in by the British 1st Armoured Division to provide extra firepower as they took on an Iraqi division about 50 miles into Iraq, west of Wadi al-Batin.

The soldiers were in two Warrior infantry fighting vehicles when they came under fire from the plane. Colonel Barry Stevens, the British military spokesman in Riyadh said the men died "in the heat of battle". The Warriors carried clear identification markings, which were supposed to prevent attacks by friendly aircraft. "They cannot be mistaken," Colonel Stevens said.

An investigation is being carried out to discover how the A10 crew launched an attack on the two British Warriors. There was a similar "friendly" attack by an American Apache helicopter on a US armoured combat vehicle during the battle for Khafji in Saudi Arabia several weeks ago. Seven marines were killed.

The nine British soldiers, including Private Conrad Cole, aged 17, of the Queen's Regiment, were among 13 killed and ten wounded in the battle.

Continued on page 22, col 7

Continued on page 22, col 7

Continued on page 22, col 7

Continued on page 22, col 7

Continued on page 22, col 7

Continued on page 22, col 7

Major keen on June poll

The prime minister is keen to seek a fresh mandate in a June general election, close associates have disclosed. They expect Mr Major to assess the Tory performance in the May local elections before making a decision. Page 22

Leading article, page 13

Carey retracts

Dr George Carey, Archbishop-designate of Canterbury, above, has retracted his declaration that "the idea that only a male can represent Christ at the altar is a most serious heresy". Page 8

Study attacked

A scientific study claiming that children's intelligence can be improved by vitamin pills was criticised by experts as the pills were launched in British shops. Page 7

Pretoria clash

Right-wing extremists, angered by the detention of fellow activists, have clashed with police around Pretoria's central prison. Page 11

Base rate cut

Hopes of a further cut in interest rates spread through the City yesterday after the government sanctioned a cut in bank base rates. Page 22

Cheaper home loans, page 23

Tempus, page 25

INDEX

Arts	19-20
Births, marriages, deaths	15
Business	23-29
Classified	15, 16, 30
Court & social	14
Crosswords	15-22
Health	17
Law Report	30
Leading articles	13
Letters	13, 32
Obituaries	14
Sport	31-34
TV & radio	21
Weather	22

HANDBOOK
FOR THE POSITIVE REVOLUTION

HANDBACK WIKING £14.99

TWO NEW
Edward de Bono
THINKING MANUALS

I AM
RIGHT
YOU ARE WRONG

HANDBACK WIKING £5.99

LIBERATION

Troops come home in triumphant mood past Iraqi corpses

By NICHOLAS WATT AND RAY CLANCY

THE Kuwaiti army returned home in triumph yesterday, rolling past corpses of Iraqi troops and cheered on by crowds weeping with joy amid thunder and lightning across a sky darkened from burning oil fields.

American troops ringed the city while US marines won control of the airport after fierce tank battles. British and American troops did, however, go into the city to secure their embassies.

The marines seized the international airport outside Kuwait City after a 24-hour battle that destroyed more than 100 Iraqi tanks, according to a senior American defence department official. The marines, reinforced by US army mechanised forces and other coalition units, fought elements of Iraq's 3rd Armoured Division for the airport.

Kuwaiti resistance fighters rounded up their former captors and banded them to the coalition forces. Resistance fighters said that 4,000 Iraqi soldiers had been captured in the 24 hours to last night, virtually ridding the capital of the occupying forces.

Amid the excitement of liberation, one Kuwaiti nearly set himself alight in his haste to set fire to a large portrait of President Saddam Hussein in the city. Groups of Kuwaitis raced their sports cars in and out of military convoys and the normally shy women of the liberated emirate shrieked at the tops of their voices.

Pockets of Iraqi soldiers crouched beside roads in Kuwait City, guarded by American and Kuwaiti troops, as columns of tanks and armoured vehicles swept by like a carnival parade. One forgotten Iraqi ran alongside a convoy, frantically signalling that he wanted to be captured.

The roads were littered with Iraqi soldiers' boots and helmets, discarded during their desperate flight north. Iraqi bodies lay scattered under blankets. One soldier lay sprawled face up on the road, legs buckled, anguish still written across his face.

Hundreds of wrecked cars, burnt-out tanks and armoured vehicles littered the highway as the Shahid (martyr) brigade of the Kuwaiti army drove into town. They had spent the night with Saudi forces on the outskirts of the city.

Wives ran to husbands they had not seen for months, brothers embraced and parents with tears coursing down their cheeks welcomed home sons. Cars carrying pictures of the emir, Sheikh Jaber Ahmed al-Sabah, and Crown Prince Sheikh Saad al-Sabah, weaved dangerously among British, American and Soviet-made tanks rumbling into the city centre.

Battle-weary US marines and infantrymen, some clearly moved at the spectacle, waved on the Kuwaitis. "We were here to protect them and help them out," Sergeant Steve Dodkin, aged 25, of Charleston, Indiana, said as he stood beside his Bradley fighting vehicle.

In Britain, exiled Kuwaitis shed tears of joy as they recognised relatives from television pictures, the first confirmation for many months that their families were alive and well despite the Iraqi atrocities and killings.

Mousa Mohammed, one of the volunteers at the headquarters of the Free Kuwait Campaign in London, said: "I thought my cousin looked strange at first because he had grown a beard, but it was him, he looked happy and was celebrating. It made me want to go back right away."

He gave details for the first time of the way messages were sent by a secret army of men from occupied Kuwait City to London. They were broadcast on a shortwave radio transmitter to Sweden where Kuwait exiles fixed them on to London. Five people risked their lives to send the messages. The information was gathered by a group of resistance workers.

News of the Iraqi atrocities first emerged from these clandestine messages which also provided information about the strength of Iraqi forces and the extent of damage to buildings and roads. No more are expected as the equipment has been commandeered by the authorities in Kuwait.

However, others were worried by reports of thousands being taken away by the retreating Iraqi soldiers. A British woman, whose Kuwaiti husband has been caught up in the war, said she was desperate for any news. Jayne Fayrouz, aged 30, who is living with her parents in Mold, Clwyd, has not seen her husband since she left Kuwait in June to return home to give birth to her second child, Paris, who was born three days before the Iraqi invasion.

She has had four letters smuggled out from her husband, Faissal, a marine fire officer, whose job was to patrol oil tankers along the coast, but nothing has arrived since January.

Many Kuwaitis believe the Iraqis soldiers responsible for the rapes, tortures and killings should be brought to justice. Jassem Muhammad, a Kuwaiti MP who was elected to the National Council two months before the invasion but managed to escape to Britain, said there should be no hiding place for those who committed atrocities. Of Saddam he said: "He's a person who has no values. He's not even civilised, his behaviour is inhuman. He's neither a Muslim nor an Arab."

However, he thought the allies should stop short of pursuing Saddam inside Iraqi borders. He hoped that the Iraqi leader would be brought to trial by his people, but warned that if he was not handed to the coalition, he risked being lynched.

Rules of war, page 12
Letters, page 13

GOVERNMENT

Emirate facing conflict over democratic rule

By MICHAEL KNIFE, DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

AS IT returns to normality, Kuwait faces the danger of being caught between pressure from the West to expand political democracy and from its Arab neighbours to curtail reforms.

The declaration of martial law by Sheikh Jaber Ahmed al-Sabah, the exiled emir, on Tuesday, in the wake of the reported withdrawal of Iraqi forces, sent shivers of concern through pro-democracy activists in the exiled Kuwaiti community. They regard martial law as the thin edge of the wedge that will enable the al-Sabah family to reassert its grip on Kuwait and its control over the emirate's vast oil revenues and extensive international investments.

"The Sabah family don't want to share power," Ahmed al-Khatib, a veteran left-wing activist and former national assembly deputy, said. He contends that there are about 650 adult males in the ruling family, about sixty of whom are the sons of the emir. This group and a few thousand acolytes, he says, hold the real power and have no intention of allowing it to be diluted by democracy.

This is strongly dismissed as a minority view by many of the Kuwaitis who have been campaigning for the emirate's liberation. "Political reforms were under way, recommended by the government and supported by the people," said Dr Jaafar Behbehani, a clinical psychologist and official of the Association for a Free Kuwait, a patriotic pressure group which is said to be independent of the Kuwaiti government-in-exile.

Only a day before the emir's martial law announcement, Dr Behbehani pointed out that the Kuwaiti ruler undertook that demands for greater public participation in government would be incorporated in a proposed national charter for the emirate.

The emir's promise was seen by many as the price demanded by the West for re-establishing the al-Sabah family's constitutional authority.

In contrast, most of the Arab states in the multinational alliance already regard Kuwait's relatively advanced political system with distinct unease. The other tribal autocracies of the Gulf, and Saudi Arabia in particular, fear that if activists in the emirate succeed in winning greater reforms their success will spawn unwelcome democracy movements.

Kuwait claims a long history of democracy, and until five years ago had the freest press in the Arab world. Although out of a population of 800,000 only 65,000 males over 21, who can trace their citizenship to before 1920, have the vote, the emirate has the distinction of being the only one of the six Arab Gulf states to have an elected parliament.

Six national assemblies have been elected since independence in 1961. They provided a platform for politicians ranging from radical pan-Arabist socialists to Islamic fundamentalists. In 1985 opponents of the government in the 50-seat assembly had a ten-seat majority.

This parliament was dissolved by the emir at the height of the Iran-Iraq war a year later. The official reason was Kuwait's sensitive neutrality in the war, although many believe the involvement of members of the royal family in a serious financial scandal was the real cause.

Leading article, page 13

Jubilant: a resident of Kuwait City, top, waving the national flag at a Kuwaiti army tank; centre, men dancing on the roof of a police station outside the capital as an American soldier keeps watch; and a woman giving the traditional greeting to welcome visitors, sprinkling perfumed water on the hands of a US embassy guard

DIPLOMATIC TIES

British envoys to revisit embassy

By OUR DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

MICHAEL Weston, the British ambassador to Kuwait and the last Western ambassador to leave the occupied emirate, flew to Riyadh yesterday and is expected to reopen the embassy in Kuwait today.

Mr Weston endured a 111-day siege without water or electricity facilities before leaving the embassy compound in mid-December. He will be one of the first diplomats to return and he is being accompanied by Barry Lowen, a second secretary.

When he departed in December, Mr Weston left the building secure with the British flag flying over the compound. The Foreign Office emphasised at the time that the government was not bowing to Baghdad's demand that diplomats be withdrawn and said the embassy remained open in the formal sense.

British officials were uncertain yesterday about conditions in the compound although one said "as far as is known the embassy is still standing". The two diplomats will be taken from Riyadh by the British military and they are expected to rely on them initially for provisions.

Mr Weston will stay in Kuwait City only briefly. Until the Kuwaiti government-in-exile makes a formal return to the city, he will join them at their administrative headquarters in Saudi Arabia.

REPARATIONS

Kuwait may demand oil as it rebuilds own industry

FROM REUTERS IN PARIS

KUWAIT will not be able to produce oil for nine months and may demand Iraqi oil as part of war reparations, according to Sheikh Salem Abdul-Aziz al-Saud al-Sabah, governor of its central bank.

As allied armies ended Iraq's eight-month occupation of Kuwait City, the central bank governor told Le Monde, the French daily, that nearly 650 of the country's 900 oil wells had been set ablaze by Iraqi troops. "We do not know how long it will take to put them out and restart production. I do not think it will restart for nine months," he said.

Kuwait would demand war reparations from Iraq staggered over an undefined period and they could be made in the form of oil. "Iraq is a very rich country. We are not asking for immediate repayment but staggered over time. They can easily produce 2.5 million barrels per day... discussions on the form reparations are to take will be held in due course," he said.

The distribution of contracts to rebuild the shattered emirate was well advanced, he said. Reflecting US military dominance in the coalition to free Kuwait, he said American companies had been granted the majority of contracts for an urgent rebuilding phase. British firms had been granted 22 per cent of the contracts and other allied nations would also be given projects.

The Soviet Union, which supported United Nations demands against Iraq but did not commit any forces, would also be awarded contracts to rebuild the country, Tarek Razouki, the Kuwaiti ambassador to France, said.

Two French ministers were due to leave Paris today for talks with Kuwaiti leaders on postwar reconstruction of the emirate, he added. Mr Razouki said that Michel Charasse, the budget minister, and Thierry de Beaucourt, the junior foreign minister, would meet Sheikh Jaber Ahmed al-Sabah, the emir, and other Kuwaiti leaders.

Political and economic challenges await on road to recovery

By MICHAEL BINYON, DIPLOMATIC EDITOR

Yamani: forecast an oil glut and sharply falling prices

THE liberation of Kuwait poses enormous challenges for the world. The allies must immediately clear the country and capital of mines, weapons, burnt-out tanks and street barricades. They must set up an interim administration to hold together the ravaged country.

They must also decide what to do with suspected collaborators and non-Kuwaitis who now risk violent revenge. And they must begin the colossal task of reconstruction, repairing buildings and getting basic services, such as water, electricity and sewage, functioning before allowing exiles to return.

The restoration of the exiled government and the return of the ruling al-Sabah family is a first priority. This potent political symbol was a condition laid down by the United Nations, and recognition of the emir's rule by Iraq must be explicit before the allies agree to a ceasefire.

But the Kuwaiti government has already announced that martial law will be imposed until enough order can be restored to permit a civilian administration. The Western allies have repeatedly declared that they will not set up a permanent presence in the region. But such is the scale of destruction and the enormity of the clean-up that only an operation on a military scale will be able to make Kuwait City habitable.

The US Army Corps of Engineers has signed a 90-day contract to carry out the initial phase of reconstruction. Other allied engineers may also be invited to stay on under the military administration. So far British companies have received contracts worth only $46 million (£24 million). Military engineers have already begun making Kuwait safe for its inhabitants. This will mean removing hundreds of thousands of mines, demolishing dangerous buildings that have been blown up or set on fire, and extinguishing the oil fires at the well-heads.

The government of Kuwait is faced with the daunting task of repairing the war's ravages and making a devastated land habitable, Michael Binyon reports

Kuwait City has also been torn up by barricades, booby-traps from the roads must be removed and the barricades that were erected in anticipation of house-to-house fighting must be dismantled. Looted hospitals must be re-equipped and sewage and desalination plants repaired. Water is critically short and, with only limited supplies from desert wells, floating desalination plants may be moored for some months off the coast.

Equipment, generators and supplies are now being brought in by lorry from Saudi Arabia. A priority will be the repair of telephone links, so that people abroad can find out whether their families are safe. Exiles will not be allowed to return until housing can be repaired and municipal services are running again.

More urgently, the government will round up any Iraqis who were brought to settle in Kuwait after the invasion. Most have left to escape the anger of the mobs, but there are fears some may attempt to pass themselves off as longtime residents. The last Kuwaiti census, now under the guard of the United Nations, will be used to check the pre-invasion population.

The government has announced that it will not allow most of the foreign workers who fled after the invasion to return. Sulaiman Mutawa, the minister of planning, said recently that Kuwait would adopt a new population policy, so that never again would there be seven foreign workers for every three Kuwaitis. A more urgent issue is what to do with the Palestinians and others who stayed during the occupation. Some are accused of collaboration and of looting Kuwaiti property, but others joined the resistance. There may be strong popular pressure to expel all of them, but the international community is sure to press the military authorities for proper investigations and hearings. Identification of war criminals will be a priority. President Bush has promised that they will face individual prosecution.

The reconstruction of Kuwait is now estimated to take at least 10 years. The cost was put at about $50 billion (£26.1 billion) a week ago, but since the destruction of the oil wells this could now double. With more than 500 wells burning, Kuwait is losing an estimated $100 million a day. Until the fires can be extinguished and the installations repaired, the flow of oil cannot begin. This will severely hamper Kuwait's ability to restart using its oil wealth. The allies will move swiftly to lift the United Nations embargo on Kuwaiti oil, but there will soon be a glut on the market. Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the former Saudi oil minister, forecast in a lecture in London earlier this week that oil prices would fall to about $12 a barrel when Kuwaiti oil came on stream.

'The sky rained fire and the earth heaved beneath me'

Philip Jacobson, with the 32nd Field Regiment in Iraq, describes a night made dreadful by battle

A LONG column of Iraqi trucks out of the driving rain just after dawn, heads bowed, hands high. They walk like men emerging from a nightmare, and there is every reason for that.

A few hours earlier, I watched as a terrifying barrage of artillery fell upon the position these troops occupied around an artesian well. For almost 40 minutes, the sky rained fire upon them: salvo after salvo of heavy shells and volleys of long-range rockets lit up the dark almost continuously, with sudden blossoms of bright red flame marking one hit after another.

From where I was lying at the side of a Desert Rat command vehicle just over a mile away, the flashes were blinding and the earth heaved beneath me. As shells passed overhead with a noise like someone tearing heavy canvas, the air pressure changed perceptibly. Then came the double boom of impact and percussion wave, like the slamming of a heavy door.

The thought of being under that hail of shrapnel and high explosive was quite atrocious: several of the young British soldiers who had joined me to watch this extraordinary and, it must be admitted, riveting spectacle, caught their breath and swore quietly, unceasingly aware of what torment their enemies were enduring.

When the barrage lifted, a ground attack by Challenger tanks and infantry went in immediately, designed to exploit the numbing effect of the bombardment. The sky lit up again, this time with long streams of red tracer rounds drifting lazily into the Iraqi position.

Machineguns were hammering incessantly and we heard the deep thump of Milan anti-tank rockets seeking Iraqi armour. We could follow the course of the battle on radio links in our signals vehicle; the voice of Brigadier Patrick Cordingley, commander of the Desert Rats, was on the air continuously, pressing this unit to get a move on towards a new objective, cautioning another not to get carried away before securing an enemy gunpost.

A flurry of traffic would indicate that a new attack was under way, yet virtually every voice was calm and composed, even when the first of the British casualties was brought in. Severely wounded, he was rushed to a nearby aid post and treated before being evacuated to a more sophisticated hospital. Shortly before dawn, another prolonged artillery attack was begun and the earth began shaking again. It was the last straw for the Iraqis, who appear to have laid down their weapons where they stood and set off in search of someone to accept their surrender.

That was when we came across them, being rounded up by a handful of bewildered gunners from 32nd Field Regiment. "They just loomed up out of the rain and stood looking at us," Staff Sergeant David Sergeant explained, gesturing to the POWs now sitting quietly on the sand and whispering among themselves. "A lot of them looked dazed, punch-drunk maybe, and they stood there while we searched them for weapons without saying a word."

Trench warfare: a British infantryman with 4th Armoured Brigade lobbing a grenade into an Iraqi position in the desert yesterday

Most of the prisoners were shivering with cold, at least one had no boots. Within minutes, a new pair of British army issue was produced, plus cakes, chocolate bars and cigarettes. David Sergeant handed out what was left of his wife's last parcel. "The war's over for them now and I have nothing against these lads, in fact I'm delighted they turned it in instead of getting killed."

The regimental sergeant major, David Hill, took me over to a handful of officers segregated from the rest. One young captain spoke passable English, explaining that his unit had surrendered because there was no longer hope of escape.

"British army good men?" he asked me, and I assured him that all the POWs were safe and would be decently treated. An older man said something in Arabic: "He told me to say to you that this is the second time he is prisoner of war, and he knows the British are kinder than the Iranians."

By the time our column was under way again, the Challenger tanks of the Queen's Royal Hussars and the Scots Dragoon Guards grinding on towards their next objectives. Our own vehicle, named The Whore of Babylon by someone who knew his Book of Revelations, could not keep pace, as Brigadier Cordingley's exhortations crackled out over the radio. He seemed to be in a good mood, joking with one officer who had reported the capture of "a dozen soldiers and a major from Iraqi Ordnance" that Ordnance majors consider themselves quite important chaps. On the way up to the new frontlines, we passed elderly T-55 tanks dug in by the Iraqis for use as artillery, some abandoned without damage, others blackened by direct hits.

The artillery was forming up again. Soon it would be another Iraqi unit of cold, hungry and dispirited men absorbing the fearsome bombardment. Let us hope they would also have the good sense to surrender.

Border corps paves way

By HARVEY ELLIOTT

THE American VII Corps made the opening for the biggest British armoured assault since El Alamein by smashing through the sand berms, mines and barbed wire entanglements laid by the Iraqis as a first line of defence along their border with Saudi Arabia.

After a 30-minute artillery barrage, in which more explosives were used than in the 1942 desert battle in which their predecessors had earned their nickname of "Desert Rats", the Americans drove through to create a bridgehead inside Iraqi territory with troops and armour deployed in a circle to ward off any counter-attack.

Then 2,500 armoured vehicles and Land Rovers from the British 1st Armoured Division poured in through the lanes in the minefields.

Once the first objective had been reached the second brigade, the 7th in the division, was brought into the attack, swinging right into Kuwait to attack other Iraqi units. The 14th/20th King's Hussars and the 3rd Battalion Royal Fusiliers smashed through an infantry brigade taking countless prisoners, while The Royal Scots took on an enemy artillery battery.

The sporadic counter attacks were quickly beaten off.

ALLIED ADVANCE

Schwarzkopf runs rings around Republican Guard

By MICHAEL EVANS, DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

THE trapping of the Republican Guard in southern Iraq, blocking off their escape routes and forcing them to fight or surrender was the coup de grace envisaged by General Norman Schwarzkopf, the allied commander, when he drew up his blueprint for liberating Kuwait.

But even he could not have expected so rapid a conclusion to his strategy. The encirclement of President Saddam Hussein's best equipped forces appears to have been achieved in less than 72 hours from the moment the allied land offensive was launched at 4am local time on Sunday.

The speed of the advance and the collapse of the Iraqi resistance in Kuwait itself forced Saddam yesterday to go for the only option left if he wanted to save his Republican Guard from annihilation or humiliation: total acceptance of the United Nations Security Council resolutions, including recognition of Kuwait as Kuwait, instead of Iraq's 19th province. Saddam's "surrender" to the demands of the security council was still not the final word. But his implicit admission of defeat was only brought about because the allies kept up the military pressure.

The Schwarzkopf plan, which has brought the conflict to possibly the most critically balanced stage between war and diplomacy, was dependent on a number of factors. First, the breaching of Iraqi defensive positions in southern Kuwait and southern Iraq had to be completed, so efficiently that once allied armour began to thrust forward through the mine-cleared gaps, the momentum could be maintained, not just because of the fear of an Iraqi artillery or chemical attack, but also because passing armoured divisions with their logistical support through a breach in defences is a complex process. Each division had a separate, though linked, objective, which could not be pursued if armour, infantry and supplies became mixed up.

Second, the Iraqis had to be kept guessing. Deception tactics, principally involving the US 1st Cavalry Division which kept on charging at the Iraqi positions across the Kuwait border, were used to persuade the enemy that the main American thrust was going to come 100 miles east of where it took place. After spending so many months dug down in defensive positions, it was impossible for the Iraqis to respond to the real threat when it came. The mobility and manoeuvrability of the US, British and French divisions, in particular, helped to outsmart them. While expecting the main allied axis to come through the centre of the Saudi-Kuwaiti border, the principal thrusts were made to the west and east.

Third, a forward base was needed in southwest Iraq in order to block the main Basra to Baghdad supply route, to threaten the Republican Guard from the rear, and to provide a fuel and maintenance site for the US, British and French armoured divisions as they swept up through Iraq to encircle the guard, spread out over an area about ten miles by 15 miles south west of Basra.

This was the boldest of General Schwarzkopf's moves. When first reports emerged of a leapfrog by 300 transport and assault helicopters of the US 101st Airborne Division on Sunday to a spot about half way to the Euphrates river, the impression was that the Americans had set up an ad hoc refuelling site in the middle of the desert, somewhere near Nasiriyah, 175 miles south of Baghdad.

In fact, the 101st had seized an Iraqi air base, thus meeting the three objectives demanded by General Schwarzkopf. The base is now being used as the key allied refuelling and helicopter-strike launch point for the attack on the Republican Guard. Fourth, assuming the main allied axis succeeded in overrunning the Iraqi positions in Iraq, west of Wadi al-Batin, the objective was to continue as rapidly as possible northwards to complete the trap around the Republican Guard.

The French Operation Daguet division were to be the first to reach the 101st base, so that they could take up a position on the Nasiriyah to Baghdad road.

The Republican Guard's back is blocked by the Tigris river, without any bridges for retreat. The only escape route, by road due north through Basra, is too narrow. The encirclement is thus complete.

Rifle range: hundreds of enemy weapons displayed by French troops in the Iraqi town of Salman yesterday

RECONSTRUCTION

Baghdad electricity 'hit for year'

FROM REUTERS IN BAGHDAD

IRAQ will need at least a year to restore electricity supplies to Baghdad because of severe bomb damage, a senior Iraqi engineer said yesterday.

Thakir Ismail al-Qubaisi said American-led air raids in the first week of the war had destroyed all ten of the Iraqi capital's substations, used to distribute power to Baghdad's 4.5 million inhabitants. Although there was no independent confirmation that all substations had been knocked out, two shown to correspondents had been reduced to rubble with burnt-out control rooms and twisted pylons.

Mr al-Qubaisi said two units, at Yarmouk in western Baghdad and al-Waziriyah in the north, had served 900,000 people as well as factories and hospitals. "The damage is severe. Nothing can be repaired, just look at it," he said of the Yarmouk plant. The sound of exploding bombs were heard in the distance as he spoke.

Mr al-Qubaisi, who is responsible for substations, said he could not estimate the cost of restoring power supplies and buying replacement equipment. "Prices have gone up since these substations were built. As for the time needed, I would say one year." Iraq was a net electricity exporter before the Gulf confrontation. Its national power grid has been either shut down or damaged in raids. Delays in restoring electricity are likely to have a big impact on the resumption of industrial activity.

What little generating capacity remains in Baghdad is now used to pump water to residents for just two hours a day. The health ministry says the serious shortage of treated water and the inability to process raw sewage mean epidemics such as cholera and typhoid could spread. The ministry has advised Iraqis to boil water before drinking or cooking to reduce the risk of disease. In one poor, low-lying area of Baghdad, residents waded through streets shined deep in water after heavy rain. One resident said there was no power to work drainage systems.

Washington and its allies say that they have bombed only military or militarily useful targets. Iraqi officials say the aim of the raids is to destroy the nation's infrastructure and punish civilians.

BRITISH ARMY Victory elates Desert Rats

FROM KEITH DOVKYANTS WITH THE 1ST ARMOUR DIVISION IN IRAQ

THE Desert Rats were advancing at lightning speed across Iraq yesterday, elated after their first victory and within sight of completing their combat role. Commanders were optimistic that, for British troops, the fighting could end soon. So far, ten men have been killed in action and six wounded.

The 4th and 7th Armoured Brigades were seeking out pockets of resistance yesterday, but as Iraqi soldiers continued their wholesale surrender, a British officer said: "It's like herding sheep."

They took hundreds of prisoners in Monday's battle, in which a mechanised brigade equipped with Soviet tanks was over-run. Yesterday the prisoners, a ragged, beaten and demoralised rabble, were passing through a holding area behind the front line before being driven to camps in Saudi Arabia. All Iraqi wounded have been evacuated by helicopter with British casualties.

The 1st Armoured Division, with other coalition forces, had the task of suppressing the vaunted Republican Guard, but it was not clear yesterday whether this would be necessary as these troops are proving less of a threat than was feared. A concentration of them north of British positions was reported to be breaking up. (This report is subject to allied military reporting restrictions)

IRAQI FORCES

Military claims that pullout is completed

FROM ASSOCIATED PRESS IN BAGHDAD

IRAQI claimed yesterday that its soldiers had completed their withdrawal from Kuwait "by first light this morning" but that allied military assaults continued. A military spokesman said the allies had launched an airborne landing at an air base near Nasiriyah, about 175 miles south of Baghdad, and were confronted by Iraqi civilians and units of the Popular Army militia.

According to Baghdad radio, the spokesman said the pullout was in line with President Saddam Hussein's orders, "although the enemy has interfered in the withdrawal of our forces and demonstrated all his cowardly, mean and lowly characteristics".

On Tuesday, the radio reported that Saddam had visited frontline commanders of the 1st Army Corps to inspect preparations for defending against "great Iraq's security and sovereignty". The broadcast, which variously referred to Saddam as field marshal, president and commander-in-chief of the armed forces, did not reveal the time of the visit or the position of the corps. However, the corps is believed to be on Iraq's border with Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, where some reports suggested fighting was raging.

The military spokesman did not say if Iraqi regular troops were involved in the fighting near Nasiriyah, where the air base has been repeatedly attacked by coalition bombers. Bridges around the city also have been subject to repeated bombing. Much of the country around the city is marshland, making the highways in the area crucial for travel.

Travellers from Basra to Baghdad avoid the highway between the cities, along the Euphrates north of Nasiriyah, was cut off yesterday and that they had been diverted along the Tigris highway. They said they saw hundreds of military lorries carrying soldiers moving north from the Kuwaiti border into Basra late on Tuesday.

(This report was compiled under Iraqi censorship.)

ADVERTISEMENT

Amstrad PC3286 business system...

Amstrad's new Generation 3 range of high quality powerful-business PC systems are unbeatable for specification, expansion potential, compatibility and reliability. Within this range the powerful 3286 system provides the best value.

...with Lotus 123 v2.01 Lotus 123 is the best selling business package in the world (RRP £395). It allows you to do business forecasting, plan budgets, spreadsheet work and much more. Alternatively you may choose one of the following best selling software packages instead:

- Ashton-Tate Framework II
- Lotus Symphony 2
- PC Tools Deluxe 5.0

With ST models choose an extra software pack. With 2.5Mb (or more) Ram models choose an extra 2 software packs.

...at unbeatable value from the UK's leading PC dealer

Time Computer Systems Ltd are one of the UK's leading PC specialists. All models come fully tested and ready to use. You will not find better value with full service & support at a lower price.

...with full support and optional 3 year warranty.

All models come with full Time technical support and one year onsite service. We recommend the comprehensive 3 year Time-cover warranty option which gives you peace of mind and ensures that you are productive for the whole of this period. It covers all parts, labour & damage costs with full provision of free loan equipment should your need repair. Please ask for details.

Tel. (0254) 682 343 9am-7pm and ask for sales. Fax (0254) 684 053

3286 ST 40Mb HD VGA Screen £899 with Lotus 123 Framework II Mouse Paint package 12m onsite service

BASIC models are fully specified systems which come to you ready for use immediately

- Fast 16MHz 286 processor, 1Mb Ram
- 1.44Mb 3.5" floppy 100 keyboard
- 40Mb, (400Mb (100Mb) or 200Mb (150Mb) autostarting hard disc
- MS-DOS 3.3 & utilities

ST™ models

- Microsoft compatible mouse
- Extra RAM models. Many of today's programs e.g. Windows 3 need at least 2Mb to work well.

VGA Mono prices shown below

Model	40Mb	100Mb	200Mb
BASIC	£799	£1049	£1399
1Mb ST	£899	£1149	£1499
2Mb ST	£999	£1249	£1599
2.5Mb ST	£1049	£1299	£1649
4Mb ST	£1199	£1449	£1799

Please call for special prices for PC3086, PC3386 and ALT Laptops

Other screen options

- 14" VGA colour £190
- 14" VGA colour NEC Multisync 2A £170
- 15" 25" 1200 internal (fixed) Monitors as well as 3.5" floppy drive
- £60-1120 Tape streamer £299
- 12000000 Tape streamer £499

TIME Computer Systems Ltd

Time House, Devonport Rd, Blackburn BB21EJ, Lancs.

Sales Tel (0254) 682 343

9am-7pm (Mon-Fri) and ask for sales

Covered delivery C.V. West Midlands Government & Education Dept. Local Govt. Public & Private. Subject to change and subject to delivery of the 1990

Moscow backed demand for linkage to Arab-Israeli issue

Primakov, arguing for a political way out

WITH Moscow's attempts to mediate in the Gulf effectively at an end, the Soviet media yesterday began what will inevitably be a long process of self-justification and recrimination over what went wrong and why.

First into the fray is Yevgeni Primakov, President Gorbachev's special envoy throughout the Gulf conflict, who reveals among other details that he — and the Soviet side in general — supported President Saddam Hussein's desire to link an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait with an Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories. He also argues that "tough economic sanctions and the huge demonstration of military might" left enough space to seek a political way out of the impasse.

Mr Primakov, who has known Saddam personally since the 1960s and made his most recent trip to Baghdad shortly before the beginning of the land war, has been given a series of full-page articles in Pravda to defend his peace efforts and implicate a selection of other people. The first of his detailed accounts of secret diplomacy, published yesterday, describes the Bush-Gorbachev summit in Helsinki and his first mission to Baghdad in October.

Once a Pravda correspondent in Iraq, Mr Primakov says he believes Saddam's call for linkage between Kuwait and the occupied Arab territories could have been used beneficially, if only to call the Iraqi leader's bluff. He says this view was presented to President Bush at the Helsinki summit, where Moscow also expressed fears about the uncontrollability of a Gulf war.

With the Soviet peace initiative in the Gulf effectively at an end, Mary Dejevsky examines the start of the long process of finding someone to shoulder the blame

Mr Primakov says the idea found its way into the final communiqué in the agreement to work actively to regulate conflicts in the region, but that the American side refused to go beyond a vague formulation. "Although even this... opened significant opportunities for political action". In a clear attempt to jog Mr Bush's memory, Mr Primakov also recalls the assurance the president gave at the Helsinki press conference that the American troop presence in the region was temporary. Speaking of Saddam's character, Mr Primakov says that even in the 1960s, when he first knew him, he was distinguished by "toughness which could often escalate into cruelty, a strong will bordering on capricious stubbornness, and a readiness to pursue his goal at any cost — all combined with a dangerous unpredictability".

These traits, the Soviet envoy says, have become more accentuated with Saddam's increasing age and responsibility. Mr Primakov's exclusively negative assessment of Saddam may be intended to dispel speculation that he was too inclined during negotiations to give the Iraqi leader the benefit of the doubt.

Another detail that the special envoy provides also seems designed to spread the blame for failure. He points out that he always travelled with Soviet foreign ministry officials, in particular with S.V. Kirichenko, whom he describes as "one of the best Arabists of our younger generation". The foreign ministry involvement in Mr Primakov's missions had not previously been revealed by the ministry itself, whose spokesman consistently referred all queries to the president's office.

While Mr Primakov's account casts new light on events of the past seven months, much Soviet media comment in the conservative press seems to have been written without taking account of the swift allied land victories. A signed commentary in Sovetskaya Rossiya accuses the United States and its allies of pursuing a "frenzied military offensive" against Iraq. "The machine of death assembled by the West is gathering speed," it goes on. "All around is electronics, the high-technology 'culture' of destroying people."

A dispatch from Baghdad in the same paper by Viktor Filatov, a special correspondent who is editor of a military-historical monthly, says the Iraqi army has displayed "fortitude, courage and bravery" and claims that the allied offensive was at a standstill. Colonel Filatov, it was revealed last week, travelled to Baghdad in the retinue of Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi foreign minister, after his penultimate visit to Moscow two weeks ago.

UNITED STATES

Hurd flies to Washington for talks on postwar deal

FROM MARTIN FLETCHER IN WASHINGTON

WITH Iraq's army rapidly collapsing and President Saddam Hussein suing for peace, Douglas Hurd, the British foreign secretary, flew at short notice to Washington yesterday for urgent meetings with President Bush and James Baker, the American Secretary of State, on postwar settlements.

Their discussions were to encompass longer-term plans for promoting lasting stability and security in the Middle East, but of most immediate concern was how to achieve a satisfactory political outcome to the war, particularly if Saddam tries to remain in power.

Roland Dumas, the French foreign minister, is due to arrive in Washington for similar talks today, and he will be followed tomorrow by Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the German foreign minister, as the question of how to win the peace assumed new urgency following the coalition's unexpectedly swift military success.

President Bush used his meeting with Mr Hurd to express his "gratitude and appreciation" to the British government, the British people and particularly the British troops in the Gulf. "A relationship that has always been strong has never been stronger. We are very grateful to the people of the UK for their commitment for their fighting forces and their heroic performance in battle and the total co-operation we have had from day one."

He spoke of "the genuine respect and affection" that he and the American people felt towards Britain and said the co-operation in the Gulf was "a deep and profound manifestation of the relationship that all of us in this country treasure."

Mr Hurd said the British had found it natural because it was the right thing to do but also because President Bush had made it easy. He praised a quality of leadership that had been "very high and very consistent. We have had confidence in that all the way through. We are glad to be alongside."

Iraq's apparent acceptance of the need to renounce its claims on Kuwait, release all prisoners of war and pay reparations has simplified the immediate diplomatic task, but still left some problems. "Saddam and his military machine are simply incompatible with a lasting and just peace," said Dan Quayle, the vice-president on Tuesday. If military humiliation fails to topple Saddam, Washington and London would have to rely on continued economic pressure on Iraq to do the job.

Mr Baker has already said that economic and reconstruction aid for a devastated Iraq would depend on a change of leadership. Washington would also insist on an international arms embargo to prevent Saddam rebuilding his military strength or pursuing weapons of mass destruction, and could insist on some sort of inspection regime.

Mr Hurd and Mr Baker were also expected to discuss transitional peacekeeping arrangements until a new permanent regional security structure could be established. These arrangements would have to protect not only Kuwait, but also the territorial integrity of Iraq against possible moves by Iran or Syria.

Earlier this month Mr Baker suggested the establishment of a permanent ground force made up of local troops under the auspices of the Gulf Co-operation Council or the United Nations. Mr Bush and Richard Cheney, the US defence secretary, have spoken of US backing for such a force through a continued naval presence in the Gulf, prepositioned military stockpiles and joint training exercises.

ISRAEL

Levy looks to settlement but Arab anger simmers

FROM RICHARD OWEN IN JERUSALEM

PALESTINIANS were yesterday struggling to come to terms with the scale and speed of the Iraqi collapse in the Gulf war.

Israel, for its part, began to prepare in earnest for the postwar peace negotiations. David Levy, the foreign minister, said he was ready to talk to Palestinians from the occupied territories provided they were not beholden to the Palestine Liberation Organisation. The PLO is widely seen as discredited because of its support for the Iraqi dictatorship.

On the streets of Arab east Jerusalem, Palestinians began to turn their anger against President Saddam Hussein. Some continued to maintain that he was a Muslim hero who had achieved a moral victory by standing up to a huge multinational force. Local Arab newspapers and Jordanian television have underplayed the extent of the Iraqi defeat, with few reports about the surrender of Iraqi forces. They have instead concentrated on the Iraqi leader's offer to withdraw from Kuwait.

The "withdrawal" has, however, caused dismay. "Saddam has betrayed us," a money-changer in the walled Old City said. "He said he had secret weapons, he promised us the mother of all battles and the liberation of Palestine. Instead we have the mother of defeats." Others in the area were equally bitter. "Saddam should leave this life to save some Arab honour," one youth said. Some Israelis, relieved that the end is in sight, have begun to tear down the masking tape and plastic sheeting in their sealed rooms, their joyful mood reinforced by Purim, the annual Jewish carnival, when Israelis put on fancy dress and play practical jokes.

However, an army spokesman warned the public to remain on alert and to keep gas masks handy. He said the danger of an Iraqi chemical weapons attack on Israel would not pass until a ceasefire was declared or Saddam was overthrown.

Yitzhak Shamir, the prime minister, said peace would not prevail unless Saddam disappears from the international arena. The newspaper Yedioth Aharonoth said Saddam had his back against the wall and "may soon reach a situation where he has nothing left to lose", but he could still fire missiles at Israel as a final gesture.

Israeli right-wing supporters who had called for retaliation against Iraq said, however, that the moment had passed. Rafi Eitan, the agriculture minister and former general, said it would be "unprecedentedly foolish" for Israel to attack Iraq now. History would merely say that Israel had "jumped on the bandwagon to reap a profit at the last moment".

Instead, Israel hopes that its restraint will bring it dividends in the postwar settlement. Mr Shamir said the tremors set off by the war would reverberate in the Middle East for a long time.

Shamir: no peace while Saddam remains leader

Military engagement: President Bush, looking more relaxed than at any time in the past two weeks, congratulating General Maxwell Thurman on his retirement from the army at a ceremony in Virginia. The general was commander of the US forces during Operation Just Cause in Panama

UNITED NATIONS

Peacekeeping plan alters

FROM JAMES BONE IN NEW YORK

THE United Nations has revised its contingency plans for peacekeeping in the Gulf in the light of allied successes, and now envisages the creation of a demilitarised zone along the Iraqi border.

Since Iraq says it has accepted UN Security Council resolution 660 calling for its withdrawal from Kuwait and negotiations between the two countries about their differences, UN officials foresee the need for about 5,000 peacekeeping troops to police a buffer zone along Iraq's borders with Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Iraq also says that it is prepared to accept two other resolutions dealing with its annexation of Kuwait and liability to pay compensation, but it is calling for four other UN resolutions to be repealed (see box below).

The force, comprising five to ten infantry battalions, would enforce an "area of separation" of three to five miles on either side of the border. A separate detachment of UN military observers would supervise a wider "area of limitation", up to 30 miles on either side of the border, in which the number of troops and equipment is restricted. The organisation's planning is based on its experience of policing the Iran-Iraq border since the end of the war between those two countries three years ago.

The first peacekeeping troops could be deployed within 48 hours of a security council decision. The first UN blue berets to reach the Gulf would probably come from the American-led military action in southern Iraq was setting an "alarming precedent" if it intended to topple the regime of President Saddam Hussein.

Reports from the region have confirmed that American, British and French armoured and airborne units have thrust deep into southern Iraq in an attempt to seal off the retreat of elite Iraqi units and their armour.

"People are responsible for their leadership," said Mr Izzedine. "No other state can impose a different leadership. It is a dangerous precedent."

In a more practical warning to the coalition forces in Iraq, Crown Prince Hassan said that the heavily armed Iraqi people would be likely to fight to defend their land from foreign attack and cautioned that the war in Iraq could take a very different turn from the relatively easy victory enjoyed by the allies over Iraqi occupation troops in Kuwait. "If foreign soldiers are seen effectively to attempt to cross the line into southern Iraq, into Iraq proper, I think that a very proud people, the Iraqi

JORDAN

Allies accused of breaking war law

FROM RICHARD BEESTON IN AMMAN

JORDAN accused allied forces of violating international law yesterday by carrying the land war into Iraq, and the kingdom's crown prince warned the allies that they would become bogged down in a guerrilla war if they remained in the country.

Abraham Izzedine, the information minister, said yesterday that in particular the American-led military action in southern Iraq was setting an "alarming precedent" if it intended to topple the regime of President Saddam Hussein.

Reports from the region have confirmed that American, British and French armoured and airborne units have thrust deep into southern Iraq in an attempt to seal off the retreat of elite Iraqi units and their armour.

"People are responsible for their leadership," said Mr Izzedine. "No other state can impose a different leadership. It is a dangerous precedent."

In a more practical warning to the coalition forces in Iraq, Crown Prince Hassan said that the heavily armed Iraqi people would be likely to fight to defend their land from foreign attack and cautioned that the war in Iraq could take a very different turn from the relatively easy victory enjoyed by the allies over Iraqi occupation troops in Kuwait. "If foreign soldiers are seen effectively to attempt to cross the line into southern Iraq, into Iraq proper, I think that a very proud people, the Iraqi people, would clearly seek to defend themselves. There is an extensive people's army network. There is an extensive and competent ability to resist. It will become guerrilla warfare."

The Jordanian warning also reflected concerns in Amman that if Saddam is toppled, one of its few influential allies left in the Arab world would also disappear.

Jordanian officials are especially worried that Arab forces in the coalition — in particular Egypt, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia — will seek to punish Amman in the postwar era for its support of Iraq by starving the Jordanians of their badly needed financial aid and cutting it out of the political arena.

The Amman government estimates that it has lost $8 billion (£4 billion), twice its annual domestic output, since the conflict began on August 2. Some Jordanian ministers have attempted to put a confident gloss on the country's predicament by promising that Jordan will be able to stand on its feet economically by finding new markets for its product. "We will survive quite well," Mr Izzedine claimed yesterday.

However, his faith in Jordan's self-sufficiency was not shared by some of his compatriots, who were queuing outside the Kuwaiti embassy in Amman for visas to return to the newly liberated emirate.

Missile killed two US women soldiers

Greensburg — Two young women reservists from Pennsylvania were among those killed in an Iraqi Scud missile attack on an American army barracks in Saudi Arabia, military officials said.

They were the first female American soldiers to die in the Gulf war and were identified as Christine Mays, aged 22, of Rochester Mills, and Beverly Clark, aged 23, of Armagh. Both were reservists and members of the 14th Quartermaster Detachment.

The two women were among 28 American soldiers killed when a Scud slammed into a US army barracks in Saudi Arabia. At least 14 of the 28 dead were believed to be from the 14th Quartermaster Detachment and another reserve unit with its headquarters in western Pennsylvania, the officials said. (Reuters)

Norwegian offer

Oslo — Norway is prepared to send troops, aircraft and warships to the Gulf as part of a United Nations peacekeeping force in Kuwait, defence officials said. The defence ministry spokesman, Einar Helund, said 11 observers for a UN peace force could be in place with 48 hours' notice. Sweden and Finland have also offered to send UN observer forces. (AP)

Papal hopes

Rome — The Pope voiced the hope that an extraordinary meeting of bishops from countries involved in the Gulf war could contribute to a lasting peace in the Middle East. Bishops from the United States, Britain, France and Italy, as well as churchmen from Baghdad, Jerusalem and Beirut, are expected to attend the meeting here next week.

Cargo refused

Bremen — German authorities refused to allow a 20-tonne shipment of ammunition to be loaded on to a ship bound for Jordan because Amman was suspected of dodging the United Nations embargo against Iraq, a customs spokesman said. A railway wagon loaded with 1.5 million pistol and gun cartridges sat on the dock for four days before being sent back to Czechoslovakia. (Reuters)

Lebanon bomb

Beirut — A bomb explosion caused minor damage to the French cultural centre in Tripoli, north Lebanon, and police defused a rocket aimed at the French embassy in west Beirut just minutes before it was due to be fired, security sources said. There were no casualties at the cultural centre. The bomb brought to 25 the number of attacks in Lebanon on the coalition's embassies, banks or interests. (Reuters)

Helping hands

Riyadh — An American soldier, stuck in the mud in a four-wheel-drive vehicle, was pushed clear by an Iraqi tank crew who then handed themselves in as captives, a senior US military source said. "One guy was in his Humvee and he got stuck and an Iraqi tank and another vehicle drove up," the source said. "They helped him get the Humvee out of the mud and then surrendered." (Reuters)

Shipping The Times overseas edition costs £3.50 a copy. It is available in the following countries: Australia, £3.50; Canada, £3.50; France, £3.50; Germany, £3.50; Greece, £3.50; Hong Kong, £3.50; India, £3.50; Italy, £3.50; Japan, £3.50; Korea, £3.50; Malaysia, £3.50; Mexico, £3.50; New Zealand, £3.50; Norway, £3.50; Singapore, £3.50; South Africa, £3.50; Sweden, £3.50; Switzerland, £3.50; Taiwan, £3.50; Thailand, £3.50; USA, £3.50.

BRITISH VICTIMS

Families mourn nine Britons killed by US pilot's error

By KERRY GILL AND PETER VICTOR

THE killing of nine British soldiers mistakenly bombed by an American aircraft in the Gulf was yesterday described by the prime minister as "one of those horrendous things that happens in war".

The deaths, one of a serviceman aged just 17, were among 13 of British soldiers in the Gulf. The defence ministry said yesterday that the incident was under investigation.

Colonel Barry Stevens, a military spokesman, said that 13 British troops had died and that ten had been wounded during fighting. American A-10, designed to attack tanks, fired at two British Warrior infantry fighting vehicles "in the heat of battle", he said. The incident was "a matter of particular sadness both to ourselves and the American forces".

The defence ministry named the nine killed in the A-10 incident as Fusilier Paul Peter Atkinson, aged 19, of the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, from Co Durham; Private Conrad Philip Cole, 17, Queen's Regiment, of Rochdale; Private Neil Walker Duncan Donald, 18, Queen's Own Highlanders, of Forres; Private Martin Ferguson, 21, Queen's Own Highlanders, of Fort William; Fusilier Richard Gillespie, 19, Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, of Tyne-mouth; Private John William Lang, Queen's Own Highlanders, of BAOR, Germany; Fusilier Kevin Leach, 20, Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, of Northumberland; Fusilier

Lee James Thompson, 19, Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, of Coventry, and Pte Stephen Timothy Satchell, 18, Queen's Regiment, of East Sussex. Lance Corporal Terence William Hill, 26, Royal Corps of Transport, of Middlesex, died on active service, the ministry said. Next of kin were informed yesterday.

The family of one soldier killed in the A-10 attack forgave the pilot his error last night. Clive Satchell, aged 16, brother of Stephen Satchell, said: "I can't blame the pilot for what happened to my brother, although I am bitterly upset. There was a big battle on, and he made a mistake. The whole family has discussed this, and we have decided he cannot be held responsible. Now it sounds strange, but this is a war, and errors can happen."

The family now wants his brother, David, aged 28, married with two children, out of the Gulf region. "I want David brought home straight away," Stephen said. "It's not right that he should be kept out there now, not in these circumstances."

Private Conrad Cole, from Lancashire, just three weeks off his 18th birthday, was such a good soldier that he had been earmarked to give army careers talks. Major John Hallam, an army spokesman, said: "He was very highly thought of. After he completed his basic training he was sent up to the army careers information office at Rochdale as a satisfied soldier — one who could project a good image of the army to the general public and any young person thinking of joining the army."

Private Neil Donald's father Jim, 36, a British Rail employee, said: "The family is devastated. My wife has taken the news particularly badly." Mr Donald's other son, John, aged 17, joined the same regiment on January 7. He is going home to Scotland on compassionate leave from basic training in Newcastle. Neil joined up in June 1988 and went to Germany with his regiment in October the following year.

Lee Thompson, of Coventry, died as his regiment fought the Iraqi Republican Guard south of Basra. Yesterday morning, an army officer called at Lee's house to break the news to his parents Michael and Barbara. Mrs Thompson said: "All we know is that he was killed in action last night. The officer said he would get in touch with us later to give us more details."

Private Donald, from Forres, Morayshire, was engaged to Gillian Kesson, aged 23, of Inverness. His father, James Donald, said his son had joined the army as a boy soldier at the age of 15. Another son, John, aged 16, had just finished a junior leader's course in the army. Mr Donald said: "The family is very upset. His mother is under sedation and is too upset to speak." The family was being comforted by Rev Bill Reid, a local minister.

Private John Lang, aged 19, also served in the Queen's Own Highlanders. His parents live at the regiment's base in Germany, where his father, Corporal Keith Lang, is serving.

Private Martin Ferguson, aged 21, of Fort William was another Queen's Own Highlander, on attachment to the 4th Armoured Brigade. His twin brother, Clark, is also in the front line.

Last night Private Ferguson's parents, Simon and Jeanette, said they were informed by an army captain. Mrs Ferguson said: "Martin wrote a poem to me which I received this week. In it he gave his feelings as to what the war was all about. He told me what he was there for, and what might happen to him."

Private Ferguson's brother-in-law, Fraser MacLachlan, was angry about the circumstances of the death. "To be killed by fragments of a US shell is so unfair it is unbelievable. The military kept that information from us."

PRIVATE Carl Mout, aged 22, who was killed yesterday during the ground offensive in the Gulf, had joined the army almost exactly a year ago. He had been due to marry when he returned after his tour of duty (Peter Victor writes).

Vicky Dolman, his fiancée, aged 19, and his family were yesterday comforting one another after they were told of his death by two officers of the First Staffordshire Regiment.

Miss Dolman, a hairdresser, said she had received letters three times a week from Pte Mout and had been counting the days until he came home. The couple became engaged five months ago.

She said: "He went to Germany and then on to the Gulf in October after passing out. The last time I saw him was the beginning of September. We were saving up for a house and looking forward to getting married. I am lonely and empty now. He was brave and I am proud of him."

His family, of Church Gresley, Derbyshire said Pte Mout had wanted to be a soldier all his life. He eventually joined the infantry section of the First Staffordshire Regiment. His mother, Marjorie, aged 63, said: "Carl was the baby of the family. He always wanted to be in the army. Even when he was little if he had a toy it had to be something to do with the army. Action Man or something. I just thought he would come home. He was so full of life."

Pte Mout trained at Whittington Barracks and was on the same course as Pte William Davies who was killed by the IRA at Lichfield station last June.

Pte Mout's father John, aged 63, said the family had looked forward to receiving letters and photographs from their son. The last letter the family received came on Tuesday, the day Carl died, and was postmarked February 18 — before the ground offensive.

Mr Mout, a retired miner who worked at Donisthorpe colliery, said: "I still can't believe the news. But he had always wanted to join the army — even though he knew it could be dangerous."

Carl Mout: family said he had wanted to be a soldier all of his life

Private was to marry on return

Thompson: killed by American fire

Donald: killed in action in the Gulf war

HISTORIC BATTLEGROUND

Conflict threatens ancient sites

By GEORGE HILL

AS THE allied ground forces push northwards to cut off the retreat of President Saddam Hussein's Republican Guard, they are entering territory that contains the remains of the earliest centres of civilisation on Earth.

Of the Chaldees, Uruk, Nippur and many other sites dating back to biblical times, some of which are still awaiting excavation, lie in the battle zone. The mounds that mark the remains of ancient cities are often the only features on the flat desert landscape, and they might be used by tank forces seeking cover in combat.

Since the danger of war first became apparent, archaeologists have been torn between fear of the damage that might be done to irreplaceable antiquities, reluctance to assist Saddam's cause by highlighting the threat to the sites of allied bombing missions, and an equal reluctance to endanger their own standing in a postwar Iraq. However, nine American scholars recently wrote to President Bush urging him to protect sensitive sites, and it is reported that the US government is seeking advice on what areas to avoid.

There is considerable evidence to suggest that for years Iraq has adopted a policy of putting installations that might be subject to military attack close to archaeological sites, as a means of protection. Hundreds of ancient sites, many with military and industrial complexes near by, are scattered throughout the Tigris and Euphrates valleys from the north of Iraq to the south. But the most ancient are those in the south.

Of the Chaldees, founded at least 6,000 years ago, is the place where the Book of Genesis emerges from the landscape of our right myth into the geography of mythologised history. A great flood there about 3000 BC might have been the origin of Noah's flood. Ur is named in the Bible as the city from which the patriarch Abraham first set out on his wanderings to the promised land. Its great ziggurat, about 80ft high and more than 150ft square, was already centuries old when he turned his back on it. Changes in the course of the river in about 400 BC dried up its fields and left Ur a ghost town.

Ur lies about 100 miles west of Basra, the main control base for the armies leaving Kuwait, and close to Nasiriyah, which has reportedly been captured by allied forces. Visits to the site have been discouraged since the base, which is overlooked by the ziggurat, was built at Nasiriyah in the early 1980s. The base must already have been the target of many bombing raids. Some reports suggest that Iraqi anti-aircraft batteries have even been mounted on top of the monument itself. "Ur is so close to the air base that it must be at risk," Dr Roger Matthews, director of the permanent British archaeological expedition to Iraq, said. He was stranded in Britain when Kuwait was invaded last August. "But I doubt whether it would be very vulnerable to an accidental hit."

Nicholas Postgate, reader in Mesopotamian studies at Cambridge University, shares Dr Matthews' confidence in the durability of the masonry of 4000 BC. "The ziggurat is a solid mass of earth and mud bricks," he said. "It would need a pretty big bomb to make any impression on it. It has been heavily restored with modern brickwork, which would be less able to resist the shock of an explosion. A bomb might shake all that off and bring the ziggurat back closer to its previous condition."

It would be ironic if, as seems likely, the crude mud bricks of Ur prove to have outlasted the modern walls of Saddam's presidential palace, blown apart by bombs almost before the plaster was dry. The region has seen many such ironies, however, as generations of fortresses have come and gone over thousands of years.

Basra itself was occupied by the British in both world wars and was made the base for three expeditions aimed at Baghdad — in 1915, 1916 and 1940. The territory that they crossed, which was the birthplace of urban civilisation, is the scene of battle yet again.

Labour sticks to firm line

By PHILIP WEBSTER
CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

THE Labour party stuck to its firm line on the Gulf war yesterday as Neil Kinnock easily beat off a left-wing call for an immediate ceasefire.

The ruling national executive issued a strong condemnation of the inhumanity of President Saddam Hussein for refusing to take the action he knew would end the war. The executive hoped that Iraqi forces would leave their military vehicles and lay down their arms, thus ensuring that the conflict could be halted.

A motion proposed by Tony Benn and Dennis Skinner calling for a ceasefire and the introduction of UN forces into Kuwait and on to the frontier with Iraq was defeated by 18 votes to five.

Outside the meeting, Mr Kinnock said that Iraq must respond quickly to calls for compliance. "It is evidence of Saddam Hussein's inhumanity that he is not speedily responding to that offer and saving a lot of lives on both sides," he said. Unless there is evidence of troops departing from their vehicles and laying down their arms then the assumption has got to be, in the interests of the safety of our forces, that they are intent upon aggression themselves."

Labour leaders are relieved that the tough line they have adopted since last August, at the risk of upsetting constituency activists and doubters on the soft left, has been vindicated.

Paddy Ashdown, the Liberal Democrat leader, called on the allies to show mercy on the battlefield. "It is now crucial that in the final stages of winning the war, we do not damage our chances of winning the peace which follows it... We have to disarm Saddam Hussein. But this does not mean that we have to humiliate the Iraqi people."

The coalition commanders should use every means to show the Iraqi soldiers, trapped in a war they did not want, how to surrender. "Mercy is a quality which should not be absent, even from a battlefield and especially in the hands of the victor," Mr Ashdown said.

Freedom for three held as PoWs

Three Iraqi students detained as possible threats to national security and then designated as prisoners of war because of their alleged military status have been freed (Stewart Trender writes).

A defence ministry enquiry has decided that they are not PoWs and the Home Office said yesterday that it had abandoned further attempts to deport them. Their release is likely to fuel criticism of the operation mounted by the Home Office, on M15 advice, to arrest and deport selected Iraqis and Palestinians because of the Gulf war.

The operation has been attacked over the inaccuracy of the information used and the individuals chosen. The three Iraqi men were originally arrested to face deportation. Redesignated as PoWs, they were among 35 held at Rolleston camp in Wiltshire as Iraqi military personnel.

The three were freed after representations to a board of enquiry made up of military officers. The other men will remain at the camp.

Wildlife action

Two wildlife experts, Roy Dennis, of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, and Burr Heneman, a director of the United States section of the International Council for Bird Preservation, flew to Saudi Arabia yesterday to examine ways of limiting the damage caused by oil slicks.

MPs want trial

Sixty-three per cent of MPs believe that Saddam Hussein should be tried for war crimes, according to a survey published last night. Out of 75 MPs questioned, eight out of ten Conservatives and nearly a third of Labour members backed such a trial.

UK firms bid

Ten British firms are on an international shortlist of 36 building companies being considered for emergency repair work in Kuwait. The firms, including Wimpey, John Laing, Higgs and Hill and GEC Marconi, have 48 hours to submit detailed bids.

first direct
0345 100 100

Ask people what they want from a bank, and give it to them. A simple approach. And, judging by the reactions of our customers, an effective one.

Our £100 cheque guarantee card, for example, is a direct result of one of the most common requests in our research.

Not satisfied with this we also added a SWITCH facility. So you can use your card to pay for goods electronically straight from your account.

Withdraw up to £500 per day from over 6,000 cash dispenser machines. You can also use this remarkable card at Midland, NatWest, TSB, Clydesdale and Northern Bank machines.

Banking experts waiting to take your calls

24 hours a day 365 days a year. Firstdirect never closes. You can call us anytime you want — Sundays, bank holidays, or in the evenings.

Your calls from anywhere in the UK are charged at local rate only. And you'll always talk to a real person, never an answerphone or computer.

You'll be able to get immediate help with anything relating to your account.

7% interest on credit balances, calculated daily, added monthly. Because we do most of our business by telephone, we have less costs than most banks. This means we can afford to provide exceptional value.

For example we pay 7% interest (net per annum) on credit balances, and interest is credited for every single day your account is in credit.

Balances over £500 earn even more.

Everything you expect from a bank — and more. Firstdirect has a full range of banking services. We are a totally independent part of Midland Group — you can use Midland branches to pay-in cheques and cash (you can also send cheques through the post).

Test us against your present bank — apply today. Applying for a Firstdirect cheque account is simple. Call us, or send off the coupon to start today.

We won't expect you to close your present account unless you decide that Firstdirect provides better service or value. We'll even be happy to transfer funds to your old bank whenever you ask. So put us to the test. There's no time like the present.

Try us. Call 0345 100 100 now.

Just phone us and we'll pay your bills for you.

Another unique feature introduced by Firstdirect is automatic telephone bill payment for your regular bills — credit card, telephone, gas, electricity, and even transfers to another bank.

All you have to do is call us, and tell us who to pay, how much to pay, and when you'd like the money to leave your account.

You won't have to write out a cheque or set up a standing order.

Enquiries must be aged 18 or over. All interest rates quoted were correct as at 15th February 1991 and are subject to variation. Firstdirect credit facilities are subject to status.

For more information about Firstdirect, and an application form, post this coupon to Firstdirect, FREEPOST HK16, Leeds LS11 0YF (no stamp required), or ring 0800 22 2000.

Name _____
Address _____
Postcode _____ Tel. No. (inc. STD) _____ 80325

Firstdirect is a division of Midland Bank plc

Personal service. Branches nationwide.

WHETHER you are in industry or commerce, in the public or private sector, the Resource of British Gas is never far away. A telephone call is all it takes to summon one of our team of experts to your doorstep.

British Gas Resource is dedicated to saving costs and improving the efficiency of industry and commerce.

It represents two inseparable qualities. The proven benefits of the fuel itself, combined with the unrivalled experience of British Gas as a company.

A unique combination, offering an unequalled nationwide service. A fund of knowledge backed by specialists in every aspect of natural gas and its applications.

At your request, we will assess your energy needs and recommend or design a specific solution to meet your precise requirements. We will then arrange for installation, commissioning and maintenance of the system.

We can also help arrange finance, and provide advice during the entire project if you require.

Our research stations are constantly using the most advanced techniques to evaluate and improve products and systems for the benefit of all our customers. And we will even train your staff in the most efficient use of gas.

Whatever your requirements, Resource offers first class support; from concept to completion. Whether you buy gas from us or not, the Resource of British Gas is a vast bank of knowledge for you to draw on. Put it to work for you.

To: Mr J.G. Whitmore, Room 532, British Gas plc, 326 High Holborn, London WC1V 7PL. Send me a copy of your Resource brochure. ☐ Arrange for me to be contacted by a member of the Resource team. ☐

Name _____ Position _____ Company _____
Address _____

British Gas

THE TIM
IC a g

A SCIENTIST
ing that build can be found pity was also yesterday. It launched in 19
The multi-eral pits are by the camp videt them fr as being sold the findings. I funded with a Dietary Resear an independent will receive 2 proceeds from project.
The Media Council, which very great day findings and in the study was a results were an press conference yesterday for the launch of the pr ing of a Q&A about the stu television, and a of a book, one of the authors.
The authors include two old professors. Han

Guita died a drug a

Stephen Clark, 48, with the band E, died on a sofa with vodka, possibly after bronchitis. His wife Jane Dean, 41, friend had asked his drinking part by Clark. He had gone to bed. The millionaire took in sleeping off the night. It was told that Mr Clark, age 48, had been dead for after passing out. Daniel von Al Clark's friend said was drinking alcohol. Clark was coming downstairs and he could not find him. Paul Kempman, manager of the band, Clark's death was a dramatic abuse of alcohol poisoning.

Official ch

Ken Hall, deputy Essex social services director, cleared by his own council as a result of a go with allegations of a Essex county council. Mr Hall had ten resignation and then accepted with.

School's di

A primary school at Green, Warrington, is launching its service - for the pub as pupils - when it council ends its sch service in April. A million education service will cater for and anyone in the co at £1 a meal.

Frozen asse

Officials who found or when emptying bones of electricity. Two power sites have that users were use carved in the shape pieces. The fraud Wear Valley council.

Windmills v

A £10 million proposi onal Power to build mills, each 150ft high. Northolt, near Hal Camall to generate electricity for 5,000 homes approved yesterday.

£950

DETAILED plans for million motorway Cambridge and No upon 19 were unve an potential consor public and private sectors yesterday.

The 24-mile eas motorway would run t A14 Newmarket by Cambridge through Fen to Lincolnshire and Tyne and Wear. St of the scheme, which the European Comm the Confederation of industry, Humberside council and Marks & S say the road would cre to 60,000 jobs.

Suppliers believe th trading opportunities o up to Eastern Europ route will be as impor the seaboard counties Channel tunnel is to L.

IQ-boosting claim attacked as pills go on sale in UK

By THOMSON PRENTICE, MEDICAL CORRESPONDENT

A SCIENTIFIC study claiming that children's intelligence can be boosted by vitamin pills was attacked by experts yesterday as the pills were launched in British shops.

The multi-vitamin and mineral pills are being marketed by the company, which provided them for the study and are being sold on the basis of the findings. The project was funded with £500,000 by the Dietary Research Foundation, an independent charity which will receive 5 per cent of the proceeds from sales of the product.

The Medical Research Council, yesterday expressed "very great doubts" about the findings and criticised the way the study was published. The results were announced at a press conference in London yesterday to coincide with the launch of the pills, the screening of a BBC programme about the study, on BBC television, and the publication of a BBC book written by one of the researchers.

The authors of the study include two elderly emeritus professors, Hans Eysenck, an eminent psychologist, and John Yudkin, a nutritionist. The results are published in a special issue of Personality and Individual Differences, a little-known journal of which Professor Eysenck is editor.

Although the study was designed to include hundreds of schoolchildren in Britain, Israel and the United States, only the American results have been produced. The project involved 615 American children aged from 12 to 16, who were given either a placebo or one of three formulations of the pills, and who took IQ tests at the beginning and end of the exercise.

The results showed that one group of children taking the multi-vitamin and mineral tablets demonstrated an improvement of four points on their first IQ rating.

"The results obtained... are believed to confirm the claim that, in certain circumstances, a supplement of vitamins and mineral elements can improve the intelligence scores of a significant proportion of school-age children," Professor Eysenck and his co-authors say in their conclusions. However, the Medical Research Council said yesterday: "There is no known physiological mechanism whereby the intake of vitamins can affect the intelligence of well-nourished people." The product being launched here was based solely on the US evidence. "The British evidence has not been made available," the council said that one example of "basic scientific reasoning" appeared to have been ignored in the study, putting the findings into very great doubt.

The study was also criticised by David Naismith, professor of nutrition and dietetics at King's College London. He had contributed to the QED programme but wrote earlier this week to the BBC demanding that his comments should be removed because of his doubts about its objectivity. The BBC declined and said yesterday the programme was fair and well-balanced.

Yesterday, Professor Naismith said he had very serious reservations about the manner in which the study was conducted, the way it was published and "most of all the conclusions it has reached". Parents should not for one moment believe that giving vitamin pills to their children would in any way affect their academic performance.

Professor Yudkin said that the pills did not improve every child's IQ, and nobody could tell which child would benefit.

Graham Aaronson, chairman of the Dietary Research Foundation's board of trustees, defended the study yesterday but regretted "the timing of the launch of the product alongside the publication of the results".

Healthcrafts Vitachieve pills are marketed by Booker Nutritional Products of Weybridge, Surrey. A month's supply of 60 tablets costs £5.99.

Medical briefing, page 17

Guitarist died after drug abuse

Stephen Clark, lead guitarist with the band Def Leppard, died on a sofa after a binge on vodka, painkillers and either heroin or morphine, a coroner was told yesterday.

Janie Dean, Mr Clark's girl friend, had asked the guitarist's drinking partner to leave his Chelsea home and had gone to bed thinking the millionaire rock musician was sleeping off the effects. The inquest was told, however, that Mr Clark, aged 30, could have been dead from any time after passing out on the sofa. Daniel Van Alphen, Mr Clark's friend, said: "When he was drinking alcohol, Stephen Clark was completely uncontrollable and would drink until he could not stand."

Paul Knapman, the Westminster coroner, said that Mr Clark's death was due to non-dependent abuse of drugs and alcohol poisoning.

Official cleared

Keith Hall, deputy director of Essex social services, was yesterday cleared by a jury at Norwich crown court of indecently assaulting a girl aged 13. Within minutes of the verdict, Essex county council said that Mr Hall had tendered his resignation and that it had been accepted with regret.

School's diner

A primary school at Rockwell Green, Wellington, Somerset, is launching its own meals service - for the public as well as pupils - when the county council ends its school meals service in April under £4.6 million education cuts. The service will cater for 80 pupils and anyone in the community at £1 a meal.

Frozen assets

Officials who found only water when emptying the coin boxes of electricity meters at two gypsy sites have found that users were inserting ice carved in the shape of 50p pieces. The fraud has cost West Valley council £6,000.

Windmills win

A £10 million proposal by National Power to build 23 windmills, each 150ft high, at Cold Northcott, near Hallworthy, Cornwall to generate enough electricity for 5,000 people, was approved yesterday.

Eysenck: joint author of scientific study

Butter and milk health claims to be reviewed

By NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

A STUDY that suggested that milk and butter might help to reduce heart attacks has caused such concern among medical pressure groups that the Medical Research Council (MRC) has been forced to organise a review of the findings.

The study, by a team led by Dr Peter Elwood of the council's epidemiology unit in South Wales, suggested that men who drank more than a pint of milk a day were eight times less likely to die of heart disease than those who drank no milk at all. It also showed that butter-eaters were about half as likely to suffer from heart disease as those who use low-fat spreads.

Yesterday officials at the council's headquarters in London said they were worried that parts of the report, particularly those concerned with milk and butter, did not appear to have been assessed by outside experts before publication. A scientific panel would be convened to referee the work as soon as possible.

A council spokeswoman said that there had been huge public interest in the study, and great pressure from various groups who felt the publication had caused confusion. "We couldn't let it continue," she said. Much of the report had already been published in scientific journals, but some parts including the references to milk and butter had not. It was unusual, she said, for an MRC unit to publish work on its own, as had happened in this case.

Dr Elwood was unavailable yesterday but he has earlier made it clear that people should not change their eating habits until his findings are confirmed by others. The report lists seven principal investigators and 62 associates and advisers who helped with the study, one of the biggest carried out in Britain. Almost 5,000 men were monitored for up to ten years, and their medical history compared with their diets, cholesterol levels and other variables.

The Coronary Prevention Group welcomed the announcement of the panel. Michael O'Connor, director of the group, said: "Everyone wants to know what to eat to prevent heart disease and that is why it is very wrong that such findings which purport to overturn medical consensus should be released to the press before they have been checked by outside experts."

The British Heart Foundation also welcomed the review.

High-fat diets, page 12
Health, page 17

£950m east road unveiled

By MICHAEL DYNES, TRANSPORT CORRESPONDENT

DETAILED plans for a £950 million motorway between Cambridge and Newcastle upon Tyne were unveiled by an influential consortium of public and private-sector interests yesterday.

The 230-mile east coast motorway would run from the A45 Newmarket bypass in Cambridgeshire through the Fens to Lincolnshire and on to Humberside, North Yorkshire and Tyne. Sponsors of the scheme, which include the European Commission, the Confederation of British Industry, Humberside county council and Marks & Spencer, say the road would create up to 60,000 jobs.

Supporters believe that with trading opportunities opening up in Eastern Europe, the route will be as important to the seaboard counties as the Channel tunnel is to London and the South-East. About 25 per cent of the cost could be financed by small to medium housing, industrial and commercial developments along the route, principally in Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, Lincolnshire, Humberside and York. The balance would have to be found from the national road-building programme.

Rural preservation and environmental groups have attacked the proposals because the route cuts through two areas of green belt around Cambridge and York, two sites of special scientific interest in Humberside and large tracts of attractive landscape and high-grade agricultural land. Supporters of the scheme insist that the road has been planned to cause the least disruption and environmental damage. In addition, the plans would need local authority approval.

The route was designed by a group of consultants including Wotton Jeffries, Kennedy Henderson and Peat Marwick and McLintock.

Mrs Patten (centre) and two other campaigners against the development in the cathedral precincts take a bird's eye view of the site

By MICHAEL MCCARTHY, ENVIRONMENT CORRESPONDENT

CARDINAL Hume's Westminster archdiocese is on collision course with the conservation establishment and some leading Catholic laymen over a planned office block in the precincts of Westminster cathedral.

Chris Patten, chairman of the Conservative party, and Lord St John of Fawley, chairman of the Royal Fine Art Commission, both prominent Catholics, are among opponents of the plan to build a

Archdiocese plan seen as gross intrusion four-storey pastoral and education centre in Francis Street, within the cathedral curtilage and the associated conservation area. They say it will obscure the free southern view of John Francis Bentley's Byzantine domes and belltower. The planning application comes before Westminster city council tonight. In a letter to The Times today Mr Patten's wife Lavender joins Sir Roy Strong and Lady Janner in calling for it to be withdrawn. They say the building would be a gross intrusion on the character of the area. Mrs Patten's home overlooks the cathedral. Yesterday, Cardinal Hume denied that the building would be aesthetically unpleasant. The view it interrupted was available only in winter, being screened by trees in summer, and it would enhance the particular corner. He said: "I don't want to be in conflict with neighbours. I want to be sensitive to their needs. But I have to be sensitive to the needs of the diocese." The building was urgently needed.

Letters, page 13

ONLY
£299*
+ VAT
SAVE £80

The Amstrad PCW 8256 Wordprocessor is now down to just £299 plus VAT.*

And it has distinct advantages over a typewriter.

It has a screen, for example, which displays 32 lines of text. This means you can see your typing and make alterations before you print it. Or simply move sections around using the 'Cut and Paste' feature.

You can also automatically centre or justify text, put words or phrases in bold or underlined.

It will even 'find' any point in a document that you ask it to.

Special keys enable you to use these and other features quickly and easily, by displaying your 'options' on the screen while your text is still in view.

Then, when you're satisfied with the result you can print your text on the fully integrated printer with options such as variable type size and italics.

DOWN.

All the text is kept for future use and reference on floppy disks that can store up to 140 pages, filed and grouped to your own personal reference needs.

The high speed RAM (Random Access Memory) lets you find any one of those pages, instantly.

So with monitor, disc drive, keyboard, printer, word processing software and £80 off, there's never been a better time to get one.

OUT.

PCW 8256 WORDPROCESSOR
£299 + VAT. SAVE £80

FOR FURTHER DETAILS RING 0277-262326

Please send me details about the Amstrad PCW8256.

Name _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Coupon information may be kept on a database. This may be passed to your Amstrad dealer, if you object please tick box ()

Send to: Amstrad plc, PO Box 402, Brentwood, Essex CM14 4EF

TEL (0277) 262326

*RPP is covered at 1-191 but may change without notice. Previous RPP £379 + VAT (£435.95 incl VAT). Offer £299 + VAT (£343.85 incl VAT). Limited period offer commencing 1-1-91, subject to availability. VAT to be added at 15%. Software subject to licence. Amstrad is a registered trade mark and Amstrad PCW8256 is a trade mark of Amstrad plc. © January 1991 Amstrad plc. All rights reserved.

Available from Alders, Atlantic, Comet, Dixons, John Lewis, Office International, Ramblows, Ryman, Whittings, and participating branches of registered Amstrad dealers.

Wrong kind of snow may be a blessing in disguise for BR

Sir Bob: no argument with transport department

BRITAIN could within three years have a railway of which to be proud if the government guaranteed the extra money needed for vital investment programmes, Sir Bob Reid, chairman of British Rail, said yesterday.

Long-term investment must increase by £2 billion to help to pay for large-scale projects such as modernising the west coast mainline and the Channel tunnel high-speed rail link, Sir Bob said. A further £300 million a year was needed for British Rail to run more efficiently.

In an interview with The Times, Sir Bob said that the increase in investment must begin with an overhaul of British Rail finances, enabling the board to increase its borrowings from the national loans fund, which would end the uncertainties created by "stop-go" investment cycles.

Sir Bob said: "As I go through the organisation I see things that are not up to standard. Money is just not getting down into the infrastructure. The government got me here to try and sort out these things, and that is what I am trying to do."

He had no argument with the transport department. "I am merely trying to wean everybody onto a different financial system. If you want to run a sensible and

Sir Bob Reid, BR chairman, wants to run a sensible and good railway. The snag is that he also wants the government to promise him an extra £2 billion. Michael Dynes reports good railway then there are certain things you have to do. There are certain things not in the budget that must be brought forward. I would like to bring forward the new trains for the outer suburban lines in Kent. I don't want 35-year-old rolling stock holding up the new TGV stock when the Channel tunnel opens."

During the 1980s, British Rail concentrated on reducing its operating costs and boosting productivity. Now the focus must change to improving performance with better infrastructure, more reliability and a better service for the customer, he added.

Rail would also need £750 million for the west coast mainline, £500 million for the new Kent trains, and more money for the beginnings of the rail link. "So you are very quickly getting up to the £2 billion level."

He said that in the next two months British Rail will have completed an environmental assessment of the proposed Channel tunnel rail link from Folkestone to the North Downs and the route through south London. The assessment will be submitted to Malcolm Rifkind, the transport secretary, and finalised by the end of the year. "Then I will be seeking a hybrid bill with government backing to have the line built by 1998," Sir Bob said.

Implementation of the recommendations identified by the Hadden enquiry into the Clapham rail crash in December 1988 were well advanced, although reducing the excessive amounts of overtime worked by some staff was causing some problems.

Carey issues retraction over 'heresy' declaration

By RUTH GLEDHILL, RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS CORRESPONDENT

THE Archbishop-designate of Canterbury last night retracted his declaration that it was "a most serious heresy" to oppose the ordination of women. In a statement heralded as a significant climb-down by opponents of women priests, Dr George Carey said: "I regret that in seeking to express this view I spoke of heresy rather than theological error, and thereby unintentionally caused offence."

He said he had been interviewed by the Reader's Digest more than three months ago. Lambeth Palace had hoped that the interview would not be published until nearer the time of enthronement in April. Dr Carey's policy is not to give interviews until then.

"In the context of a wide-ranging interview I wanted to make the point that to insist upon maleness as an essential attribute of priesthood is, I believe, to commit the fundamental error of making the maleness of Christ more significant than his humanity. It is as human rather than exclusively as male that he identifies with and saves both men and women," Dr Carey said.

Woman 'stole to possess ex-lover'

AN INTERIOR designer felt such severe emotional loss when her lover ended their long relationship that she set out to possess him "in any little way" she could, a court was told yesterday.

Jane Salvesson broke into Michael Stevens's yacht and stole personal items such as his Filofax, Bruce Houlder, for the prosecution, told Knightsbridge crown court, London. She had also spied on Mr Stevens and secretly photographed him embracing his new girlfriend on his boat at Southampton.

Miss Salvesson, aged 37, of West Kensington, London, denies theft, burglary and handling stolen goods. She is alleged to have broken in to Mr Stevens's yacht at Cowes, Isle of Wight, during the Cowes Week regatta of 1989.

Mr Houlder said that the burglary had occurred 16 months after an affair between Miss Salvesson and Mr Stevens, a computer expert, had foundered. "I suggest that when that relationship was brought to an end, she felt a deep sense of emotional loss," Mr Houlder said.

"There remained in her, certainly at the time when these offences were committed, a continuing need to possess Mr Stevens in any little way she could," he said.

Items taken at Cowes had included Mr Stevens's Filofax, of little use "unless, of course, someone had a particular interest in his affairs".

Miss Salvesson had later been seen at a wedding using a camera similar to the one stolen from the yacht. It had eventually been found by police in her bedroom and identified by its serial number.

Police who had examined property that Miss Salvesson had stored in a friend's attic had found a photograph shot from a "discreet distance" showing Mr Stevens embracing his wife-to-be, Joanna.

Miss Salvesson denied in court spying on Mr Stevens, and said that the photograph had been sent to her anonymously. "I thought someone was trying to have a little dig at me," she said.

The hearing resumes today.

doubted the integrity of those opposed to the ordination of women to the priesthood. I hope that the integrity of both sides will be respected as the debate in the Church of England on this issue continues."

Maurice Chandler, chairman of the Association for the Apostolic Ministry, which opposes women's ordination, said: "I welcome this but have doubts as to whether it will effectively undo the damage the original statement had caused." Arthur Leggett, general secretary of the Church Union, whose object is to uphold catholic doctrine in the Church of England, said: "It does seem as if he has retracted. From that point of view I welcome it."

The Rev Geoffrey Kirk, secretary of Cost of Conscience, which opposes women's ordination, said: "He has made every effort he can to defuse the situation, but I think a lot of people have been hurt. It is quite something for a near-archbishop to describe something as heretical."

The Ven George Austin, Archbishop of York and a member of the standing committee of the general synod, said: "I think it is a generous retraction which goes as far as he could be expected to go. I think it represents his own desire to keep the Church of England together."

In the interview Dr Carey said the implications of the idea that only a male could represent Christ at the altar were devastating and destructive because it meant women felt totally excluded.

A senior member of the Jewish community in Britain has launched a scathing attack on the recent World Council of Churches assembly in Canberra. Sir Sigmund Sternberg criticised the WCC for failing to tackle the resurgence of anti-semitism.

Winning shot: this photograph of competitors in last year's world wheelchair games at Stoke Mandeville won a commendation for Peter Trieffner, a photographer with The Times, at the British Sports Association for the Disabled media awards ceremony in London yesterday. Tom Clarke, sports editor of The Times, received the runner-up award in the category for national newspaper coverage of sports for the disabled. Best picture: Yorkshire Evening Post. Runner-up: The Times. Best coverage national newspaper coverage: The Daily Telegraph. Runner-up: The Times. Regional newspapers: Nottingham Evening Post. Runner-up: Chelmsford Weekly News. Radio award: BBC World Service. Runner-up: BBC Radio Essex. TV award: BBC Sunday Grandstand. Runner-up: BBC Wales.

THE introduction of the community charge has led to a sharp increase in attacks on council officials, according to a study to be published today.

Not only poll tax collectors but trading standards officers, environmental health staff and even librarians have borne the brunt of public anger at the introduction of the tax.

A survey by the London School of Economics and the Municipal Journal of 235 of the 514 local authorities in Britain found that working in the treasurer's office was now one of Courtesy controversy: demonstrators with a police escort make their way to protest against hare coursing at the Waterloo Cup meeting, near Liverpool, yesterday. In a windswept field at Alcester, a crowd of 5,000 watched hounds chase hares for the premier competition of hare coursing (Ronald Faux writes). To some, it was exciting sport; to others, a barbarity masked by 150 years of tradition. Eddie Loyden, Labour MP for Liverpool, Garston, heard the cheers as the hare tore down the field towards safety and said that the sound was a disgusting baying for blood. For Sir Mark Prescott, of the organising committee, the cheers were appreciation for the hounds' swiftness and the hare's skill. The competition lasts over the next two days. Sir Mark said that the sport had survived three independent enquiries over 30 years, and he denied there was cruelty. "If a hare is killed the end is extremely swift and no one takes pleasure in it." The first 18 hares yesterday streaked to safety. No 19 was not so lucky.

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

Barry Greenwood

THE GSi.

THE SRi.

THE GL.

THE LD.

THE CD.

THE HP

CAVALIER 1.6 L 5dr.
Typical Example	4.9% Finance 9.7% APR	8.0% Finance 15.6% APR	8.9% Finance 17.0% APR
Repayment Period	24 months	36 months	48 months
On the road price*	£11,500	£11,500	£11,500
Minimum deposit	50%	30%	20%
	£5,750	£3,450	£2,300
Interest charges	£573.44†	£1,941.72†	£3,285.20†
Monthly repayments	£263.06††	£277.27††	£259.90††
Total credit price	£12,073.44	£13,441.72	£14,785.20

Not to mention the L, the 4x4 and even the one with no letters after its name the Cavalier itself. For the first time, Low Cost Finance is available across the entire Cavalier range. You know the letters, your local Vauxhall dealer knows the numbers.

VAUXHALL Once driven, forever smitten.

THERE ARE 35 DIFFERENT MODELS IN THE CAVALIER RANGE, WITH PRICES FROM £8780 TO £19950. PRICES ARE CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS. *FIGURES IN FINANCE BOXES INCLUDE ESTIMATED COST OF DELIVERY, NUMBER PLATES, SIX MONTHS ROAD FUND LICENCE AND VAT. †INCLUDING £20 OPTION TO PURCHASE FEE PRORATE WITH FIRST INSTALLMENT. ††PLUS £20 OPTION TO PURCHASE FEE PRORATE WITH FIRST INSTALLMENT. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS ARE AVAILABLE FROM VAUXHALL FINANCE, WESLEY HOUSE, 19 CHAPEL STREET, LUTON LU1 2SE, WHO PROVIDE THE CREDIT DETAILS. A GUARANTOR MAY BE REQUIRED. LOW RATE FINANCE OFFERS ARE AVAILABLE ON ALL CAVALIERS (EXCLUDING DEALERSHIP DEMONSTRATORS). COUNTRY AND RENTED CARS) REGISTERED BETWEEN FEBRUARY 1ST AND MARCH 31ST 1991, AND ARE AVAILABLE TO PRIVATE CUSTOMERS AND OPERATORS OF UP TO 99 VEHICLES. ALL NEW CAVALIERS COME WITH ONE YEAR'S FREE MEMBERSHIP OF VAUXHALL ASSISTANCE, OUR UNIQUE ROADSIDE RECOVERY AND ACCIDENT MANAGEMENT SERVICE. CAVALIER IS COVERED BY VAUXHALL PRICE PROTECTION, WHICH GUARANTEES THAT THE PRICE YOU'RE QUOTED IS THE PRICE YOU PAY, PROVIDED YOU AGREE TO TAKE DELIVERY WITHIN THREE MONTHS OF THE DATE OF YOUR ORDER, OR AS SOON AS A CAR BECOMES AVAILABLE. FOR MORE INFORMATION, AND THE ADDRESS OF YOUR LOCAL DEALER, RING 0900 444 209.

Right-wing Afrikaners fight police outside jail

FROM GAVIN BELL IN JOHANNESBURG

RIGHT-wing extremists, angered by the detention of fellow activists, have clashed with police in the biggest confrontation of its kind since the South African government began dismantling apartheid a year ago.

Several hundred khaki-clad demonstrators broke through police cordons round Pretoria's central prison on Tuesday night, before being forced back by tear gas. At least one shot was fired, but no serious injuries were reported and there were no arrests.

Eugene Terre Blanche, the leader of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement (AWB), said "all hell would break loose" if 40 right-wing activists, detained for acts of political violence, were not released. He made the threat after his supporters had been prevented from delivering a television set to the prisoners. Police said permission had been granted for a protest rally, but they had stopped an illegal march on the prison.

Tension had been increased by a hunger strike by nine detainees, including Piet Rudolph, the deputy leader of the Boerestaat party, who has refused food and liquids for more than three weeks. Mr Rudolph issued a "farewell statement" to his followers at the weekend, and associates say that he is prepared mentally to die. They say that he has lost 26lb and is too weak to leave his cell.

Mr Rudolph, a former Pretoria city councillor, was detained in connection with bombings and thefts from state armories. He began his hunger strike in protest against the government's refusal to negotiate about an Afrikaner homeland.

Mr Terre Blanche has demanded that all right-wingers be released under a general amnesty. "If the authorities allow Mr Rudolph or any other detained right-winger to die in prison, while at the same time releasing black communists, the AWB will be left no choice but to take drastic steps," he said.

The rhetoric of the AWB leader has been undermined by a split in his ranks, which has led to the creation of a potentially more militant splinter group. Last weekend Gavie Volschenk, a long-serving regional commandant in the AWB, announced the formation of the Boer Command which would strive for a broader and more powerful alliance of right-wing forces.

Denouncing Mr Terre Blanche for hampering unity and offensive action, he said: "In the next few months we will be giving the government an ultimatum. We will say, if you cross a certain line we will put plan B into action." Mr Volschenk said that this would involve a "rising up of the Boer nation to defend our land".

PORT ELIZABETH: A black student teacher died after being assaulted by young white men at a South African swimming pool formerly reserved for whites, police said yesterday.

Ronald Mqhele, aged 26, was punched, kicked and left unconscious and bleeding on Sunday after he and his friends were told that they were not allowed at the pool. Police said that they were treating his death as murder. No arrests have been made so far. (Reuters)

Aborigines open their own school

FROM ROBERT COCKBURN IN SYDNEY

THE first Aboriginal high school in the world opened yesterday in a heady atmosphere of ancient dreamtime rituals and protest songs that conjured up the American civil rights movement.

The day marked a significant victory. After 200 years of often brutal white settlement and missionary zeal, which virtually wiped out Australia's indigenous people, St Joseph's Catholic college in Sydney, became Pemulwuy Koori college. The name belongs to an Aboriginal chieftain who fought a long campaign against early British settlement in New South Wales.

The black, yellow and red Aboriginal flag was raised and the traditional "smoking" ceremony of burning green gum-tree leaves on a tray of glowing embers was conducted through the college classrooms.

The school, which will accommodate 130 Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal secondary students, will try to straddle the chasm between the two communities in Australia.

Campaign style: Begum Khalida Zia, head of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party and widow of General Zia-ur Rahman, the former military president, giving her version of a victory sign after voting in Dhaka yesterday in the first free parliamentary polls since independence 20 years ago

Turnout high for Dhaka's free poll

FROM CHRISTOPHER THOMAS IN DHAKA

BANGLADESH conducted yesterday its first free, unrigged and largely non-violent parliamentary election in 20 years as an independent country. International observers praised it as a model poll.

Long and orderly queues formed at polling stations throughout the day and the turnout appeared surprisingly high. The peaceful atmosphere contrasted with the four previous parliamentary elections in which voters were intimidated by the military or terrified by goondas (thugs).

International observers said that they were impressed by strict adherence to procedures at polling stations and saw no serious evidence of irregularities. Large numbers of police were on standby in case of trouble, but they were not needed. Shops and businesses closed for the day. There were reports last night of minor outbreaks of violence in Chittagong and other areas. Forty people were arrested during the day in Dhaka for attempting to vote illegally.

The Awami League, headed by Sheikh Hasina Wazed and strong in rural areas, was confident last night of being the single largest party in the 300-seat parliament. But its main rival, the Bangladesh Nationalist Party, headed by Begum Khalida Zia, believed it might benefit from a surprisingly large turnout of women and young people in towns.

The question is whether the loser of the election will accept defeat without resort to the traditional tactics of strikes, mass demonstrations and violence, which could threaten the fragile democracy. One of the competing heads of party will be elected by MPs as prime minister, after which parliament will decide whether to adopt a Westminster-style parliamentary system or continue with a revised presidential model.

The contest has focused on personalities, with little interest among the largely illiterate population in policies or manifestos. The economy is the overriding concern, but not even that was debated. The 1988 election was boycotted by all four main parties in protest at tactics used by General Ershad to ensure his continuation in power.

Women hurt: At least 50 women were injured at a polling station in western Bangladesh when two rival groups clashed. Two were admitted to hospital in critical condition. (AFP)

Salvador guerrillas raid capital

SAN SALVADOR - Left-wing guerrillas seized at least four houses in an elegant residential district of San Salvador, near the official residence of President Cristiani, and fought off government troops until early yesterday, witnesses and radio reports said. One civilian died and at least six were injured and the armed forces reported three soldiers wounded.

The district of Escalon in the northwest of the capital saw fierce fighting in November 1989 when the rebels of the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front launched their biggest offensive in the civil war. Witnesses said that by dawn the rebels had withdrawn the San Salvador volcano overlooking Escalon, but the government declared six blocks around the houses a restricted zone. (Reuters)

Rebels advance

NAIROBI - Rebels of the Tigre People's Liberation Front in northern Ethiopia said they had taken two more towns in a drive to overrun Gondar and Gojjam provinces. It was the first big attack by forces of the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front, of which the TPLF is the largest part, for six months. (Reuters)

Trains collide

Ciudad Serdán - Two passenger trains collided head-on on the Mexico City-Venacruz railway line near here, killing at least five people and injuring more than 50, officials said. At least eight of the injured were in serious condition, they added. (AP)

Radiation leak

Tokyo - Japan has had a third nuclear accident within three weeks. Radiation leaked from a nuclear waste treatment and testing facility in Tokai Mura, northeast of Tokyo, after a fault in the emergency power supply system. A spokesman from the Japan Atomic Energy Research Institute said the accident was "harmless".

Violence flares in Albanian towns

FROM RICHARD BASSITT IN TIRANA

A BOMB has exploded at the headquarters of the Democratic party in the southern Albanian city of Vlore. There were no reported injuries in the attack on Tuesday night, but the building was badly damaged. In a separate development, 16 T-54 tanks have taken up positions round the town of Korce, the birthplace of Albania's late communist dictator, Enver Hoxha.

Supporters of Hoxha and other hardline elements staged a rally in the town on Tuesday and tried to restore a statue of the dictator destroyed by anti-communists last week. There has also been a large anti-communist demonstration in the town, but it is unclear whether there have been any clashes.

President Alla has praised Hoxha and proposed a referendum on whether the statues that have been torn down by angry crowds should be replaced. Some automatic fire was heard in Tirana, the capital, early yesterday morning.

As Mr Alla's position becomes weaker, there is evidence that hardliners might be turning to Moscow for help. A new Soviet chargé d'affaires has arrived in Tirana amid signs that Moscow is anxious to increase its influence in the region.

Gorbachev's claim to centre ground angers reformists

FROM MARY DEBEVSKY IN MOSCOW

PRESIDENT Gorbachev yesterday visited areas of southern Belorussia contaminated by radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl disaster, and stirred up heated debates about the statement he made in Minsk the previous day.

His speech to the Belorussian Academy of Sciences, which was televised nationwide, was clearly intended as a presidential policy statement. The Soviet leader described himself as a politician of the "centre" whose main task was to prevent clashes between extremists. He also attacked "so-called democrats" - code for political radicals - for trying to engineer the disintegration of the Soviet Union. Mr Gorbachev directed particular venom at Gavril Popov, the mayor of Moscow, whom he accused of accepting the idea that the Soviet Union might break into "40 or 50 separate states".

Reformist politicians in the Russian Federation described Mr Gorbachev's statement as his harshest attack on the democratic cause and proof of his turn to the hardline. General Dmitri Volkogonov, the military historian who threw in his lot with Boris Yeltsin, the Russian leader, last spring, said he had never heard more conclusive proof of President Gorbachev's return to the past.

The Soviet leader's references to people as "the crowd" in his condemnation of demonstrations against the regime provoked widespread resentment. His response to questions at the Minsk tractor factory was also widely condemned as showing callous disregard for people's welfare. One person said: "You can't tell someone, who complains that his ration coupons won't buy anything, that you have issued a decree and he should get off his backside and do something about it. You just can't."

A Tass commentator blamed Western analysts for uncritical acceptance of the idea that Mr Gorbachev had moved towards the hardline position, and said that the president was right to call for order at a time of growing chaos. He also supported the president's objection to the way in which radicals referred to themselves as left-wingers, when in world political terms they were on the right, advocating free enterprise and untrammelled private ownership. This idea, which is new to President Gorbachev's statements, suggests that moves might be afoot for the centre to reclaim the word "leftist" from the radicals.

The Soviet leader yesterday visited the town of Vetka and the industrial city of Gomel, both of which have suffered high radiation levels since the Chernobyl accident in 1986. It was his first visit to any contaminated areas, an omission that has long been a source of bitterness in Belorussia and the Ukraine.

While his journey may have been designed to repair some of the public relations damage before the fifth anniversary of the disaster, it also had a hard political purpose. On Tuesday, he pointed out to the Belorussian parliament the scale of the pollution and the continued expense of tackling it. He said that the cost far exceeded anything which a single republic could afford, and the money could be provided only through the paternal protection of a strong Soviet centre - the point at issue in the March 17 referendum.

This is a powerful argument in a small, predominantly agricultural republic contaminated by radiation. Mr Gorbachev's tour must be intended at least in part to dissuade those who might be tempted to vote against the preservation of the Soviet Union, scaring them with the spectre of their poverty and helplessness if the nation falls apart.

By MICHAEL HORNBY AGRICULTURE CORRESPONDENT

FARMERS in Britain and the rest of the European Community will have to accept "sustained" cuts in the subsidised prices they are paid for their produce if the endemic oversupply of food is to be controlled and expenditure curbed, John Gummer, the agriculture minister, said in London yesterday.

He was speaking at the European Commission in Brussels agreed on proposals for an emergency package of cost-saving measures designed to prevent expenditure on the EC's common agricultural policy from overrunning a legally binding budgetary limit set by community governments in 1988.

Quotas and other artificial production curbs offered no more than "a quick fix", Mr Gummer told the tenth European Agriculture Outlook Conference. A "radical overhaul" was required that would leave farmers much more exposed to market forces.

The EC's agricultural expenditure was again running out of control and spending in 1991 was likely to be 25 per cent up on last year, Mr Gummer said.

Yesterday a spokeswoman for the Georgian parliament said: "Pugo can say what he likes, the issue of Ossetia is not on the agenda."

The deputies went on instead to approve measures to make it easier for parliament to be recalled in mid-term, and did other routine parliamentary business.

The demonstration, staged by supporters of the Georgian Congress, which accuses Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the president of the republic, of having "sold out" to Moscow, was a reminder of the conflicting pressures on the republican authorities.

The protesters chanted the name of Djada Iosseliani, the pro-Congress militia leader, who was arrested along with about 70 of his men last week.

Despite the defiant posturing by parliament, there were fresh signs from Ossetia itself of efforts to calm the situation and improve relations between Georgian forces and the Soviet peacekeeping contingent, which is accused by Tbilisi of bias towards the Ossetians. Latest reports said a joint patrol of Soviet and Georgian forces arrested five Ossetian guerrillas in the village of Avtch, scene of a bloody attack at the weekend which claimed six Georgian lives.

Gummer pushes farm cuts

By MICHAEL HORNBY AGRICULTURE CORRESPONDENT

FARMERS in Britain and the rest of the European Community will have to accept "sustained" cuts in the subsidised prices they are paid for their produce if the endemic oversupply of food is to be controlled and expenditure curbed, John Gummer, the agriculture minister, said in London yesterday.

He was speaking at the European Commission in Brussels agreed on proposals for an emergency package of cost-saving measures designed to prevent expenditure on the EC's common agricultural policy from overrunning a legally binding budgetary limit set by community governments in 1988.

Quotas and other artificial production curbs offered no more than "a quick fix", Mr Gummer told the tenth European Agriculture Outlook Conference. A "radical overhaul" was required that would leave farmers much more exposed to market forces.

The EC's agricultural expenditure was again running out of control and spending in 1991 was likely to be 25 per cent up on last year, Mr Gummer said.

Yesterday a spokeswoman for the Georgian parliament said: "Pugo can say what he likes, the issue of Ossetia is not on the agenda."

The deputies went on instead to approve measures to make it easier for parliament to be recalled in mid-term, and did other routine parliamentary business.

The demonstration, staged by supporters of the Georgian Congress, which accuses Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the president of the republic, of having "sold out" to Moscow, was a reminder of the conflicting pressures on the republican authorities.

The protesters chanted the name of Djada Iosseliani, the pro-Congress militia leader, who was arrested along with about 70 of his men last week.

Despite the defiant posturing by parliament, there were fresh signs from Ossetia itself of efforts to calm the situation and improve relations between Georgian forces and the Soviet peacekeeping contingent, which is accused by Tbilisi of bias towards the Ossetians. Latest reports said a joint patrol of Soviet and Georgian forces arrested five Ossetian guerrillas in the village of Avtch, scene of a bloody attack at the weekend which claimed six Georgian lives.

Georgian deputies defy the Kremlin

FROM BRUCE CLARK IN TBILISI

HUNDREDS of young demonstrators chanted abusive slogans in front of the Georgian parliament yesterday as deputies convened for the first time since tension between the republic and Moscow sharpened over South Ossetia.

The deputies refused to include in the agenda of their two-day session any discussion on Ossetia where fighting between Georgian forces and ethnic Ossetians seeking independence from Georgia has claimed up to 40 lives.

The omission was in direct contravention of a claim in the Soviet parliament this week by the Soviet interior minister, Boris Pugo, that Georgian deputies would be considering the Kremlin's demands for a broader role for Soviet peacekeeping forces.

Mr Pugo told the Soviet parliament, where the Ossetians enjoy considerable sympathy among hardline politicians, that they should hold off from imposing Moscow's will in Georgia ahead of the local parliament's session.

He served warning that the Soviet parliament did have the right to overrule its Georgian counterpart if necessary.

Yesterday a spokeswoman for the Georgian parliament said: "Pugo can say what he likes, the issue of Ossetia is not on the agenda."

The deputies went on instead to approve measures to make it easier for parliament to be recalled in mid-term, and did other routine parliamentary business.

The demonstration, staged by supporters of the Georgian Congress, which accuses Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the president of the republic, of having "sold out" to Moscow, was a reminder of the conflicting pressures on the republican authorities.

The protesters chanted the name of Djada Iosseliani, the pro-Congress militia leader, who was arrested along with about 70 of his men last week.

Despite the defiant posturing by parliament, there were fresh signs from Ossetia itself of efforts to calm the situation and improve relations between Georgian forces and the Soviet peacekeeping contingent, which is accused by Tbilisi of bias towards the Ossetians. Latest reports said a joint patrol of Soviet and Georgian forces arrested five Ossetian guerrillas in the village of Avtch, scene of a bloody attack at the weekend which claimed six Georgian lives.

Personality split: two elderly Moscow women arguing yesterday over the respective merits of President Gorbachev and Boris Yeltsin, the Russian leader

NEW YORK NOTEBOOK by Charles Bremner

Wholesome America devours tales of sinful famous

Swift victory in the Gulf is said by the guardians of the US Zeitgeist to have reinforced a new wholesomeness in American life, a turn away from the cynicism born of Watergate and Vietnam. But if America is yearning for moral certainties, the publishing industry has yet to hear about it.

Never in history has so much been made out of revealing the lusts and failings of the famous and powerful. The shelves are crammed with invective and salacious exposés. Now the book world is gearing up for the hatchet job of the year - Kitty Kelley's biography of Nancy Reagan. Miss Kelley, a millionaire from best-sellers on Frank Sinatra and Jackie Kennedy, says that the "fear factor" led many of her 1,000 interview subjects to clam up when asked about the former First Lady.

"When I wrote about Frank Sinatra, I had trouble getting people to talk because some of them were literally afraid of losing their lives... but Nancy Reagan can have you tanned, have your taxes audited or make you lose your job or corporate board position," Miss Kelley's Nancy comes over as more cruel and calculating than her toughest critics alleged. Among the more mentionable revelations are fresh shockers about the California astrologer said to have dictated White House affairs.

Hollywood's big studios have started an organised boycott of the Big Apple as a location because local unions demand too much money. But the clearest sign of a reversal in the pre-eminence of New York as culture capital comes in two new films extolling the delights of Los Angeles, one of them starring Woody Allen, the quintessential New Yorker. Fans will remember Allen's famous putdown of California from Annie Hall. The only contribution of the state to civilisation, he noted, was that you could turn right on a red traffic light. In his latest film, Scenes From a Marriage, directed by Paul Mazursky, Allen plays a sympathetic Los Angeles entertainment lawyer who abhors everything about New York. "If Philip starts in on me one more time about how New York is the cultural centre of the world and L.A. is a barren desert, I'm going to poke him in the eye," Allen says about a friend.

The other revised view of Los Angeles as a place to love comes in Steve Martin's L.A.

Story, a comedy that tries to show a likeable charm beneath everything New Yorkers have always considered most superficial about the place, from the sinister friendliness of strangers to monstrous traffic jams.

Some Woody Allen defenders see his anti-New York film as the ultimate Allen joke, but others are not so sure. He looks too comfortable with his ponytail and personalised surfboard, cruising the shopping centre with Bette Midler, who plays his wife. Reverent New York critics have not been kind to the latest effort. "I think Woody Allen has become a major drag," said Peter Bart, New York-based editor of Variety.

Woody Allen might have invented America's latest enhancement to productivity in the work place - "mood-altering fragrances". Researchers have found that a whiff of peppermint or a squirt of lavender piped in through the air conditioning alters the mood of workers and makes them more productive and vigilant. Opposition is mounting among various groups to impregnating magazines with scent samples, on the ground that it inflicts injury on sensitive postmen and readers.

And a Boston-based group of militant lesbians is demanding scent-free zones.

The courts this week issued America's first fragrance injunction, ordering a Manhattan woman to desist from wearing perfume at home while seeking a divorce. Her perfume had caused such an allergic reaction to her husband that he had sustained a neck injury from coughing, according to his lawyer.

Allen: his latest character extols the delights of Los Angeles

Mark Weller on the limits international law sets on the coalition's right to continue fighting in Iraq

Where the traffic lights of battle say halt

An Iraqi helped: how much more should we pound his comrades?

General Jacob H. Smith of the US army was under heavy pressure in October, 1991. He was fighting an insurrection on the Philippine island of Samar, his enemies had engaged in manifest violations of humanitarian law and had broken a number of ceasefires. Even when his forces finally prevailed he feared for their safety. He ordered that all insurrectionists capable of making war should be engaged and killed. No quarter was to be given.

General Smith was soon to regret his decision. He had violated one of the central principles of humanitarian law, codified in the regulations annexed to the second Hague Convention two years before. These limit the means of injuring the enemy: it is permissible to use, and it is especially forbidden to kill or wound an enemy who, having laid down his arms, or having no means of defence, has surrendered at discretion, and declare that no quarter will be given."

General Smith was brought before a court martial and found guilty. Will the international coalition be held equally liable for its refusal to cease fire and accept an Iraqi withdrawal from the theatre of conflict? Once the dust of battle has cleared, this issue is likely to feature prominently in the United Nations Security Council and in world debate.

The answer to the question comes in two parts. First, there is the extent of the authorisation to use force that was granted to the international coalition in resolution 678. Under the terms of that resolution, the application of military force must cease when it is no longer necessary for the achievement of the goals established by the UN. Had the Iraqi government accepted the obligation of a full and unconditional withdrawal before the land war began, an immediate ceasefire would have been required.

Now the land battle is under way, the security council appears to have recognised that it would not be possible to freeze the position of the coalition troops in a moment of acute vulnerability: they could not be stopped until they had achieved and secured their objective, and this included cutting off enemy forces within Iraq.

In addition, the council has now demanded Baghdad's acceptance of all UN resolutions concerning Kuwait before a ceasefire takes effect. Perhaps surprisingly, the council has therefore apparently accepted the wider interpretation of the mandate in resolution 678. According to that hitherto controversial proposition, even the secondary aim of the United Nations, such as the apprehension of war criminals and the possible extraction of reparations from Iraq, can be enforced militarily.

However, the failure of the security council to call for a ceasefire does not imply a mandate for the excessive use of force. They are still protected by the laws of war. Even if Saddam Hussein expects his soldiers to fight to the death, they must be given a reasonable opportunity to lay down their arms. This is mandated by the Hague regulations, which are now accepted as customary law, and by the universally applicable Geneva Convention. The obligation to respect the wish of enemy forces to surrender was enforced with rigour in numerous war-crime trials at the conclusion of the second world war.

In practice, the coalition forces have already complied with that requirement. No Iraqi soldier who has given up the fight has been refused prisoner-of-war status. The surrender of entire units has been achieved without wasting lives. And it is now up to the commanders of the remaining Iraqi armed forces to arrange locally for an orderly surrender. Under the Hague regulations, they can expect to be treated in accordance with the principles of military honour. However, this does not rule out that their behaviour during the conflict might be investigated with a view to prosecuting war crimes.

If there is no mass surrender, the question arises of how long the Iraqi armed forces may still be engaged. Once the international coalition has established and secured its position, its forces can defend themselves against Iraqi armour attempting to thrust through their lines. But in the absence of such an attempt to launch offensive operations it would at that point become difficult to defend a continued "reduction in the military potential of Iraq". After all, each destroyed tank and armoured personnel carrier implies the killing of young men who may have lost "the means of defence" in the sense of the Hague regulations.

The international coalition will therefore wish to turn to the security council once its position is sufficiently secured. The council would then declare a ceasefire and administer the surrender of the encircled forces. A failure to involve the UN at that crucial stage would put the moral and legal position of the coalition in jeopardy.

The author is a research fellow at the Research Centre for International Law and at St Catherine's College, Cambridge.

Funeral for a high-fat diet?

Nigel Hawkes

For the past 20 years dairy products have been cast as the villain in the dietary pantomime. Throughout the Western world, men have been bullied by their wives or cajoled by their doctors into abandoning the taste for real milk and genuine butter.

In their place have come thin and unconvincing low-fat substitutes, milk that tastes of calcium-and-water, spreads that insinuate themselves on to toast like an oil spill. Cheese has been cold-shouldered, cream waded away with a cut of the lip. We know better than to eat these things for we have been told until we believe it that a high-fat diet is the quickest way to the intensive-care ward.

Picture the spluttering around a million breakfast tables in the past fortnight, as the results of one of the biggest studies undertaken into heart disease in Britain have made headlines. Dr Peter Elwood and his team at the Medical Research Council epidemiology unit in Wales have shown that not only does drinking more than a pint of milk a day apparently protect against heart attacks, but that butter, too, is an innocent victim of the "healthy eating" juggernaut. In the survey, the eastern of soft margarines are almost twice as likely to suffer a heart attack as those who stick to butter.

The finding has shocked the MRC, which yesterday announced that a scientific panel would be convened to referee the work. The Coronary Prevention Group complained the results had been released before they had been checked by outside experts, and that it would be "a tragedy" if people adopted new eating habits on the basis of findings "which may turn out to be flawed". Ought the Welsh findings to have come as quite such a surprise? The MRC study is not the first to cast doubt on the wisdom now enshrined in a million diet charts. Like other studies, it confirms a link between heart disease and blood cholesterol, though interestingly it establishes a stronger link with the blood clotting agent fibrinogen. What it fails to show is any convincing link between fat in the diet and the chances of having a heart attack.

In this, it is consistent with the existing literature. Of seven major dietary surveys over the past 15 years, five did show a link between fat intake and heart attacks, but only a weak one; the other two showed the opposite. If the epidemic-like rise of heart disease in this century had been largely caused by dietary changes, the association should be stronger.

Consider, for example, what French specialists call le paradoxe français. Despite eating rather more fat and more cholesterol than either we or the Americans do, French men suffer only half as many heart deaths. Women in France do even better, with the world's lowest death rate from heart disease. Differences in smoking habits cannot account for the gap, because the French smoke about as much as we do, and nor can genetics, since France is just as rich a mix as Britain or the United States. This is not addressed in diet books, most of which skirt the inconvenient French with their croissants, pâté and full-fat cheeses.

If diet is not really so central, we should expect to see only modest changes in death rates among people who do change their diets, or take drugs to reduce cholesterol. This is indeed the case. A number of major trials have now been carried out in the attempt to show that heart disease can be reduced by dietary means, with disappointing results. In several cases, the risk factors — high cholesterol, blood pressure, and so on — have been reduced, but not the thing that really matters, mortality from heart disease.

Trials of drugs that lower cholesterol levels have reduced coronary deaths slightly, but have had no effect on overall death rates. People spared heart attacks simply seem to die of other things, including violent and accidental deaths, which rose significantly in two such trials.

Dr Elwood is naturally anxious that nobody should start gobbling milk and butter, at least until his findings have been confirmed. There seems every reason, however, for a more questioning attitude among consumers so long in thrall to the dogmatists of diet.

Peter Stothard, US Editor, on a president whose re-election Saddam seems to have secured

To Bush, the spoils of war

President George Bush heads the list of winners from the Gulf war by a distance. He has shown himself an action man who has proved a host of clever people wrong. Forget the vision thing: there is no more powerful combination in American politics than deeds of war and the common touch.

It will be very difficult for anyone to mount an effective challenge to the president in 1992, even though he still has no clear domestic programme and remains an object of distrust to many conservatives inside his own party. Opponents who look for help from a messy post-war settlement in the Middle East are likely to be disappointed. The new world order may turn out to be very like the old, but George Bush is not going to be blamed for that.

The 41st US president has been proved right on a range of issues that matter to Americans much more than "linkage", non-proliferation or the democratic structures of Jordan. He has proved that he has the will to press a million triggers. He has shown confidence in successful American weapons technology and successful American generals. He has confounded critics who said that the aircraft would not work, the coalition would not stick and the casualties would bring back Vietnam-age protest to the streets. He has stood up to the Soviet Union, washing away memories of those too-cozy summits with Mikhail Gorbachev before the Baltics came down. He has also stood up to whinging journalists who wanted to know more than of dietary people thought was good for them. He has repaired his relations with Israel while showing that the Tel Aviv talit does not wag the Washington dog.

His reward: the highest approval ratings since Harry Truman ended the second world war. Senior Republican senators are now predicting that not only will Mr Bush triumph in 1992 but that the Republicans could simultaneously regain control of the Senate, as they did in 1980.

With little more than a year to go to the Iowa caucuses, which Hall the conquering hero: Bush and the Republicans look an unstoppable electoral force begin the presidential campaign, Democrat aspirants ought to be falling over one another in the farmyard trails around Burlington and Des Moines. Instead, there is a quiet in the cornfields which Iowa's find mildly affronting. There was no queue of Democrats waiting to take on Mr Bush even when it looked as if the president might be heading for disaster in the Gulf. Now the sole declared candidate is George McGovern, the man Richard Nixon humiliated in 1972.

Others will come forward in time but the field is thin. The party's senior senators, Sam Nunn of Georgia and George Mitchell of Maine, have added a vote against the war to their previous handi-caps of paralyzing dullness. Senator Bill Bradley, the perennial Washington favorite, who barely escaped a mauling by his own electorate last November, has done nothing during the war to mend his reputation.

Senator Al Gore of Tennessee backed the war but took so long to do so, and meanwhile spent out his doubts in capital letters, that he hardly looks a serious threat. New York's governor, Mario Cuomo, has been calling for a quick return from desert politics to politics at home, but the success of Mr Bush's war management simply highlights the failures of governors, such as Mr Cuomo, to manage their own affairs so well.

Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, survivor of the Dukakis rout of 1988, may get a chance in the top slot this time, while younger and wiser men wait for a try at a new Republican in 1996, whom they hope will be Dan Quayle but may well now be a more substantial figure. The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, Colin Powell, haunts all hopefuls for the highest office as the war against Saddam Hussein comes to an end.

In the eyes of Republicans, almost the whole Democrat party can be turned with the accusation of hint-beardness. If the White House chief of staff, John Sununu, has his way in the campaign, a Democrat hopeful might as well be a Yemeni diplomat for all the chance he will have of facing Mr Bush on decent terms.

The president still has a few hurdles to cross. He must survive the inquest into how the war was allowed to begin in the first place. A state-department scapegoat will have to be found for the encouragement which critics can fairly say America gave to Saddam's invasion in July.

Secretary of State James Baker may not escape wholly free from that charge, or from the accusation that he was hostile to the war all along and too keen to settle it on Soviet terms towards the end. Since Mr Bush's early aim is to discourage even a token challenge to his candidature from the right of his own party, a little sacrificing of the moderate Mr Baker may even be helpful.

Conservatives today vie with each other to praise the man whom for years they have excoriated as a trimmer and a wimp. But, unlike the general populace, whose gratitude may last until 1992, the approval of the right may not survive the next domestic storm over racial job quotas.

Mr Bush will continue to struggle to shape his domestic agenda. Economic worries run high and are likely to remain high. This quintessentially Establishment man is likely again to run on an anti-Washington ticket, blaming the Democratic Congress and Capitol Hill bureaucrats. If he is bold, he may even offer comprehensive campaign finance reform, a "throw the bums out" strategy.

He will have to muddle through tax and finance debates as he did in the past. There is no new strategy. America's "defining hour", which he hailed in his State of the Union address, will no more define a way to rid the US of deficits than it will free the Middle East from future war. But, as the White House sees it, the blame for the mess can now be more easily stuck elsewhere. Farewell blunder of the budgets; hail Emperor of Mesopotamia.

...and moreover

CLEMENT FREUD

Now you all have a terrific day, said the clerk standing at position seven of the Dynasty car-rental desk to a nun and her granny, and they walked away, and he shouted: "Next".

(I had arrived at Los Angeles airport, realised that my travel agent's car-hire voucher was for a firm unrepresented within the complex, waited in the street for a Dynasty courtesy coach in which I loped from terminal to terminal before being decanted with its load of putative customers at the company's office situated in a distant suburb. As the coach slowed and stopped there was frantic activity while we all attempted to emerge before each other. I came fifth, took my place in the queue.)

"I am next," I said. "Well, what do you know? How are you?" said the clerk with a warmth and enthusiasm that on our side of the Atlantic is reserved for intimate friends. I thought of telling him about my gout (better), decided against, told him I was good. "Good" is the required US reply to "How you doing?"

"Here," I said, "is a voucher for a seven day car-hire deal that goes with a ticket I purchased."

"You've come to the right guy," said the clerk. This surprised me, for I had rather thought that car-hire company employees were recipients of heavy commission based on sales and would find a pre-paid, ready-made deal a waste of time, galling. This man was ungalled.

He examined my voucher and began by explaining that it was comprehensive — except for tax. I agreed tax.

Then gas. There was this rather special deal, exclusive to Dynasty clients, whereby rather than returning the car with its tank holding the quantity it held upon taking possession, you paid $12.76 at the astonishing advantageous rate of 90 cents a gallon and stopped worrying.

I agreed. I had not come to LA to worry about the level of my petrol tank.

We discussed a whole flummery of offers: the February bargain, dollar-a-day per named extra driver; a low-low opportunity to rent a child's chair, a roof rack, skis, and then discussed the time when I would return the car (that cost more) and moved smoothly to insurance. My voucher, I suggested, presumably provided cover. He gave qualified assent.

Five minutes later, thanks to the good man and at a cost of only $10.95 a day plus tax I have what S. Hussein would call the mother of an accident policy: my personal liability is no longer the chancy $100,000 per injury, $300,000 per incident plus $25,000 property damage that is carried by others, but represents a more realistic top limit of a million bucks, plus unlimited compensation were I to be hit by a driver who was too short-sighted to invest in the wonderful policy I carry. If I should take passengers (the clerk said: "You never know") they too are covered, as are their medical expenses that would result from a collision; moreover, should these folks encounter difficulty in their ability to meet school fees, divorce or paternity payments as a consequence of riding in the car that I have rented, the insurance company will give such matters sympathetic consideration. I signed where he indicated.

The sum in respect of which I appended my signature, bearing in mind that I had a voucher, seemed high, but there is, as the clerk explained when I pointed incredulously to the final figure, the matter of my total motoring peace of mind while I drove the freeways and turnpikes of the United States... which reminded him: should I wish to cross the border into Mexico, Dynasty has a spring offer that, in view of my valued custom so far, he would be pleased to discount by 20 per cent.

He was disappointed about my passing up that one but guessed he could not win them all, and hoped his hot streak was not coming to an end. "Now you have a terrific day. Next."

A German couple shuffled forward to become his next victim and I walked to a compound at the rear to pick up my "fun" car: an ugly, white, Japanese sub-species of a saloon that rumbles nastily at speeds over 40 miles per hour, but might yet make The Guinness Book of Records as the most over-insured vehicle in California.

Golden shots of Tokyo

Anti-terrorist officers hunting the IRA team who carried out the recent bomb attacks in London could do worse than turn to a Japanese film crew for advice.

On the morning the mortars were launched on Downing Street from a van in Whitehall, the three-man crew from the Japanese quiz show Joshiki Hi Joshiki (Common Sense of the World) were yards away filming passers-by for a slot in the show which asked the question: "How do British gentlemen dress?" The crew heard the explosion, saw the bombers make their escape on a motorcycle and were filming the blazing van long before police arrived on the scene. Subsequently their pictures were sold to television stations around the world.

The following week, the crew were asked to supply footage of rush-hour commuters to illustrate the question: "Why do British people like to dress the same?" The obvious setting was a main-line railway station, and the crew set up their cameras at Victoria on a busy Monday morning. Within minutes, the station concourse was rocked by the lethal IRA explosion.

This time none of the American news channels would buy the footage, says Tamara Henriques, head of research at Tele-Search, the company that organised the trip. "The Americans believed that the Japanese crew had some sort of contract to film the IRA in the same way that they said CNN appeared to have a deal with Saddam Hussein."

The good news for those who might care to give a wide berth to future locations chosen by the crew is that they have returned to Tokyo. The bad news is that they will be back next month for a further series.

Another sign that Saddam Hussein's days are numbered. A greetings card bearing his signature was sold in Nottingham yesterday for £220, five or six times the expected price. "Collectors don't distinguish between fame and infamy," says auctioneer Nigel Kirk. "The bidders clearly felt that this particular autograph could be about to acquire a distinct scarcity value."

Queue for Kuwait

A senior member of the government will fly to Kuwait City to congratulate British troops on their role in the liberation, probably early next week. There is still some debate within Whitehall circles about which minister will make the trip, but a Foreign Office source says: "The first visit is likely to take place within days of the fighting ending. It will be a tonic for the troops. The prime minister or defence secretary are clearly best qualified for that."

Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, apparently accepts that he will not make the first trip, but he is likely to be an early visitor as part of a trade mission. The Foreign Office is also apparently determined to ensure that its man arrives in the Gulf before Michael Heseltine, the environment secretary, who wants to supervise Britain's contribution to cleaning up the environmental disaster the Iraqis have left behind.

Whoever is first will have been beaten by Michael Weston, the ambassador to Kuwait, who plans to be back at his desk tomorrow. "We hope that the last diplomat to leave will also be the first back in," says an FO source, who hints that the politicians could also be upstaged by a lightning royal visit. "Prince Charles visited the troops just before the war began and a return visit by a senior member of the royal family at such an early opportunity would be a perfect answer to critics of their war role."

Tread carefully

Westminster Abbey's decision to roll back the carpet and reveal a 13th-century mosaic pavement, on view to the public over the next three days, has wrought havoc on the abbey's role as a place of active worship. The high altar has been left marooned, and nobody, parishioner or archbishop, will be allowed to set foot on the 20 sq ft of historic pavement in front of it. The pavement's flagstones, laid by Henry III in 1268, sport purple porphyry from Egypt and multi-coloured marble from Italy, arranged in five circles. "The mosaic is quite dilapidated and is normally protected by a carpet. So the whole area in front of the altar is out of bounds," says the abbey. "Even the vergers who moved the carpet had to wear cotton moon-boots to walk on the pavement."

Treasure hunt

Whatever else the Iraqis scorched earth policy may have destroyed, the Kuwaitis are increasingly confident that they will be able to recover the great al-Sabah art collection, for which many had feared. The Kuwaiti government in exile says it has information that suggests the treasure, one of the finest collections of Middle Eastern art, has been removed but kept intact by the Iraqi antiquities and heritage department.

Experts believe that the Iraqi officials who removed material formerly housed in Kuwait's Dar Al Athar Al Islamiya museum, have acted honourably. Nicholas Postgate, of the oriental studies faculty at Cambridge, says: "We have heard that the Iraqis themselves have made meticulous lists of the treasures. They have behaved in a responsible manner, even if their leaders have not."

The Kuwaiti government will insist on the return of all 20,000 items after the war, and even now is checking its inventory and film records to ensure none escapes its attention. Their work has been hampered by the disappearance of the original museum catalogue, but a duplicate copy has been found and is now kept under constant guard. "Its location is confidential," says the private office of Sheikh al-Sabah, a nephew of the Emir, who owns the collection.

A colleague returns from France with a tasty little bottle of a 1988 Chardonnay bearing the name "Thatcher" bought in a Cherbouge hypermarket. Alas, he offers the bottle only the label but describes the bottle's contents as "dry with a hint of tartness". How will this year's vintage turn out?

WHEN TO STOP

American and other generals have secured for the allies a famous military victory in the Gulf. Nobody needs sleep over President Saddam Hussein's repeated half-concessions to allied ultimatums. All five members of the United Nations Security Council rejected his latest version yesterday and endorsed the allied demand for "unconditional acceptance" of all 12 UN resolutions. With each new military reverse, he has accepted the last deadline but one. He has continued his Scud attacks. He has allowed his tank commanders to fight on. Not even now has he acknowledged the scale of his defeat or responded to the insistence of the UN that he draw a line under this disastrous chapter in Iraq's history.

The second of the two general allied objectives, the security council's requirement in resolution 678 that the Gulf area be rendered peaceful and secure, was deliberately drawn to permit the widest possible interpretation. Under it, American, British and French units have driven deep into Iraq, have engaged the Republican Guard round Basra and have established a line to impede and disarm Iraqi units retreating from Kuwait. It is plain that Saddam, whatever he may say, constitutes a continuing threat to Kuwait and that the Republican Guard is the substantial part of that threat. Even if he were to accept, as he eventually must, all last week's allied conditions for ceasefire, some longer-term threat would remain.

Mr Bush previously stated, on many occasions, that he did not intend to wage a general war on Iraq or seek the overthrow of its leader, much though the latter would please him. Now that Kuwait has been liberated and the Iraqi invader forced back across the border, he is confronted with a widely predicted dilemma. What should he do next?

Mr Bush might have been wiser to state clearly, for the benefit of the rest of the world, that he always regarded the demilitarisation of southern Iraq as a war objective. As it is, the impression of a "hidden agenda" has revived. Continued attacks on civilian infrastructure targets in and around Baghdad no longer serve any obvious military goal. If they are only intended to demoralise the population, even to trigger the overthrow of Saddam himself, they should cease.

Since the possessor of such insuperable might can do anything he likes, where should he stop? The danger for Mr Bush and other allied leaders is that, flush with success, they will allow themselves to be sucked by Iraq into capping military success with political error; that they will be seduced by their presence on Iraqi soil and by the economic anarchy unleashed by their bombings into setting the terms of Iraq's future. American and allied troops can defeat Iraq militarily, as the British defeated General Calvi. But the British did not topple him, his folly did. The Americans apparently intend to disarm the Republican Guard by destroying or removing its weapons and occupying southern Iraq. But do they demand Saddam's personal surrender and trial for war crimes and install their own regime in his place?

The Americans have denied any desire to advance on Baghdad. But escalation of war aims is a familiar syndrome of victory. Much nonsense has been talked about not upsetting long-term relations between the West and the Arab states when the war is over. A feature of the region is that relations are conditioned by short-term self-interest and can survive most shocks. At the same time, it cannot be in the West's interest, nor that of the United Nations as a consensus organisation, for the Gulf war to be presented by America's latest enemies in the Middle East as a ploy to insert American puppet regimes. Such a regime in Baghdad, the beneficiary of military conquest, would be wholly unstable without continuing American support.

The toppling of Saddam is a worthy political objective. But it can hardly be achieved by military action short of an intervention that goes way beyond the United Nations mandate. Such an intervention would strain pan-Arab tolerance to the limit. Saddam has not yet acceded to the full list of allied requirements for ceasefire. But if he does so, Mr Bush and other allied leaders will need to move with extreme caution. Iraq's leadership has not necessarily lost its cohesion or its cunning. Its territory has been occupied and its army beaten, but the quagmire remains, the swamp into which countless Western powers have toppled by their incautious involvement in this benighted region. America too must know when enough is enough, when it is sensible to halt.

KUWAIT'S FRESH START

With the retreat of Iraqi troops, Kuwait is reborn as a sovereign state. Its government will be tempted to defer questions about what kind of a state that will be while urgent practical tasks are carried out. Formally, the restitution of Kuwait's sovereignty, the central demand of the United Nations, must mean exactly what it says. If Iraq's leadership is held to be a matter for Iraqis, external intervention in the affairs of Kuwait in the aftermath of Iraq's invasion cannot be justified.

The prime minister, Sheikh Saad al-Abdullah al-Sabah, reacted icily yesterday to proposals by opposition politicians to hold a conference in London next week with representatives of American, British and French political parties. For the sake of its relations with the Arab world, the West must tread with care to avoid the appearance of neo-colonialism. Yet Iraq's invasion last August only deferred the conclusion of a spirited political battle for the restitution of constitutional rights in Kuwait. Reformers are as impatient as the outside world for the Emir, Sheikh Jaber Ahmed al-Sabah, to make good his pledge this week to give the people a greater role in political life.

There is no domestic challenge to the legitimacy of the ruling al-Sabah family, but many Kuwaitis believe that this moment is their best chance to entrench political reforms. They would welcome discreet Western pressure, above all since Kuwait's Gulf neighbours, who even before the invasion considered the emirate dangerously modern in its political thinking, are far from enthusiastic about the rapid democratisation of Kuwaiti life.

The declaration of martial law issued on Tuesday need not be inauspicious. The country is in chaos, its administrative structure dismantled by the Iraqis and its records largely destroyed. Streets and houses must be cleared of mines, essential services such as water restored and — a task which will take many months — work begun on capping the fires raging in two thirds of the country's oil wells. Kuwait's human wounds will also take time to heal. Its people have been terrorised. At least 7,000 have, according to estimates accepted by the Foreign Office, been killed; at least another 17,000 are missing, possibly hostages in Iraq. There is documented proof of appalling tortures inflicted by Iraqi secret police. Martial law may be necessary to prevent revenge killings of Palestinians. Many helped the resistance, but a minority collaborated, even forming militias and acting as informers.

Yet martial law will be more acceptable if accompanied by a timetable for the restoration of democracy. Kuwait was not a feudal tyranny. By contrast with its neighbours, it has a quasi-democratic constitution dating back to 1962 under which six national assemblies have been elected since independence in 1961. That constitution was suspended by the Emir in 1986, when he also disbanded the national assembly and imposed censorship on what had been the freest press in the Arab world.

Before August 2, opposition demands centred on the restoration of these rights. Today, a return to the 1962 constitution is only a starting point. The franchise is too narrow, excluding all but 65,000 Kuwaiti males who trace their citizenship to before 1920. Women, who have for some time held senior executive positions, should be given the vote, as should long-term residents of Kuwait who, at great personal risk, demonstrated their solidarity with Kuwait during the occupation.

The Emir promised this week that Kuwait would change. A brutal occupation in which many Kuwaitis forgot narrow tribal loyalties has already seen to that. The West can now encourage the accountability and participation which the country will need as it embarks on its reconstruction. But this second liberation is for Kuwaitis themselves to bring about.

A SUIT IN THE STREET

John Major is fast evolving his own distinctive style of presentation. Unlike previous prime ministers, he is not relying on private press briefings or televised confrontations in the House of Commons to communicate with the public. He has punctuated his theatrical pomposity and substituted the common or garden street, or at least Downing Street.

Mr Major is seen daily chatting with unseen interrogators, grey of hair and grey of suit, with a backdrop of dark Georgian brickwork, railings and a deferential policeman. His answers are undemonstrative but clear and positive. The image is of a doctor on his way to a house call, caught by a passing camera and offering brisk reassurance before hurrying on his way.

The new style is not without risks. Mr Major eschews the colour-coordinated backdrop, lectern and microphones of a Washington news conference. He is vulnerable to the confusion of shouted questions and excessively spontaneous answers, and to the hesitant final smile and nervous glance that can spoil the effect as he turns to leave. By performing in the open air, his voice loses its bass register and can sound thin. Hair can be blown in the wind and hand-held lights can cast unflattering shadows.

These cosmetic hazards do not worry him. He has a remarkable ability to speak grammatically without notes. He is learning how to end each interview crisply and step back through the open door (a stagey manoeuvre fraught with danger). He is clearly in control of his environment, unlike the rascous Commons where assertion means shouting down a hubbub. There is rarely scope there for a coherent message.

Downing Street is not a rostrum on the White House lawn, from which President Bush now likes to hurl his thunderbolts with a backdrop of white Palladian splendour. But then Mr Major is not a head of state, an imperial leader or even an orator. He is "grey", but his greyness is not that of dullness but of reassurance. His message is a reasonable and modest one, as befits the leader of a reasonable and modest country. It is a message from the man in the street to the man in the street. Where better to convey it than from Britain's most famous street?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN Telephone 071-782 5000

Geneva rules put Example on pay set from the top

From Mr Patrick Young
Sir, In the early days of this war we were shown pictures of allied airmen prisoners. A justified outcry was raised that prisoners of war should not be shown in humiliating circumstances, etc. The Geneva Convention was cited. And yet on television last evening and in today's newspapers we were shown pictures of Iraqi prisoners looking dejected (naturally) and surrounded by soldiers with rifles — surely very humiliating.

The only kind picture we were shown was of an Iraqi kissing his captor in relief.

Yours faithfully,
PATRICK YOUNG,
31 Lansdowne Road, W11,
February 25.

From Mr Michael A. Meyer
Sir, Air Marshal McDonald's letter (February 20) gives a somewhat misleading impression of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and of the use of the red cross emblem.

On February 18 the ICRC contacted the 27 parties to the conflict in the Gulf region regarding the protection of the civilian population in Kuwait and Iraq, referring to the possibility of establishing neutralised zones.

The Fourth Geneva Convention 1949 provides for the establishment of hospital and safety zones and localities, and of neutralised zones. Such zones are intended to shelter from the effects of war certain categories of persons unconnected with the hostilities or who are "hors de combat".

The agreement of the parties to the conflict is required for these zones to be established, and the ICRC may lend its good offices to facilitate the institution and recognition of such zones.

Only those zones exclusively reserved for the wounded and sick may be marked by a means of the red cross or red crescent emblem (the latter being used as a protective emblem by Iraq). Safety and neutralised zones used by unconnected civilians may be marked by means of oblique red bands on a white ground, placed on buildings and other precincts.

The 1977 Protocol I additional to the Geneva Conventions 1949 permits civilian air and sea routes to be marked for protection by the international distinctive sign of civil defence (an equilateral blue triangle on an orange ground). Iraq, the United States and the United Kingdom are not yet parties to the protocol.

Yours faithfully,
MICHAEL A. MEYER, (Head, Legal Department),
British Red Cross Society,
9 Grosvenor Crescent, SW1,
February 26.

'An eye for an eye'

From the Reverend Canon Michael Kitchen

Sir, It would have been better if the Chief Rabbi (February 20), in expounding the meaning of the Hebrew scriptures, had refrained from misquoting the Christian New Testament.

By conflating parts of two distinct sentences in Matthew, he gives the impression that Jesus is here represented as contrasting "an eye for an eye" with "turning the other cheek", and that the New Testament is thus responsible for the misinterpretation of the Mosaic injunction in terms of literal, physical retaliation.

In fact, Matthew attributes no such direct contrast to Jesus. The antithesis of "an eye for an eye" is "do not resist one who is evil", which is quite general and does not imply any view of the meaning of the original (Matthew 5:38, 39a).

Pictures of dismay

From Mr David Ke

Sir, As a dealer in British pictures, I am constantly depressed by buyers' obsession with a Name ("The fine art of imitation", February 20). Most insist on a signature and a Name instead of using their own judgment and "eye" to acquire attractive works of art by those well-known artists, "18th/19th and 20th century English School", who offer

From the Director-General of the Confederation of British Industry

Sir, Geoffrey Robinson writes (February 25) of the need for top management to set an example on pay, and calls on the CBI to show how many of its members have done that.

The important example that needs to be set is that pay at all levels (including in the boardroom) should reflect the performance of the business over the longer term. In line with the economic down-turn, the CBI's pay database is currently recording the biggest quarterly fall in settlements in manufacturing industry for four years.

Other recent surveys show that the pay of senior executives in Britain is falling further down the international league tables, even though the UK share of world manufactured exports has been rising continuously over the past few years and we continue to export more per capita than Japan, for instance.

Our members are well aware that any board of directors can expect to be challenged unless the relationship between directors' pay and the results in the most recent annual report is very clear and defensible.

As the first controller of the Audit Commission I introduced performance-related pay to the local government audit service and insisted that increases in my pay reflected solely the commission's view of my performance in achieving its strategic objectives. I refused, therefore, to accept the so-called top peoples' pay awards, even though my compensation was substantially lower than it had been in the private sector.

Since I have been director-general of the CBI my compensation has been determined on precisely the same basis: the judgment of our presidents on my personal performance. That is the way it should be and increasingly is throughout British business.

Yours faithfully,
J. M. M. BANHAM,
Director-General,
Confederation of British Industry,
103 New Oxford Street, WC1,
February 26.

Poll tax 'agony'

From Mr Ralph Howell, MP for Norfolk North (Conservative)

Sir, There is no way to make the poll tax fair, workable or acceptable. It must be scrapped, before April 1, in order to save us from another 12 months of political agony and farce.

We must repeal the community-charged legislation with a single clause repealing Bill. This could be put through both Houses of Parliament in one day, if necessary, and the lost revenue should be replaced immediately with an extra 7 per cent on VAT.

This would mean everybody would pay, and everybody would pay according to their spending and, thus, according to their ability to pay. Food, housing costs etc., would of course be exempt, as is the case with the 15 per cent VAT we already pay.

I have estimated that a person with an annual income of £3,000 would pay between £70 and £100; a person earning £10,000 would pay between £200 and £250 and a person with an income of £20,000 would pay between £400 and £500.

The advantages would be enormous and immediate. There would be no registration, no exemptions, no prosecutions, no extra bureaucracy. There would be a saving of over £1 billion which the poll tax is costing to collect and local government expenditure would be brought firmly under central government control, as it must be if we are ever to stop the excesses of local government.

Time is running out. The prime minister must act decisively and act now. If he struggles on with the poll tax in any shape or form for another year, he will meet the fate of his predecessor.

Yours faithfully,
RALPH HOWELL,
House of Commons,
February 21.

An editor's rejoinder

From the Editor of The Sunday Times

Sir, I hesitate to return to the matter of the royal family and the Gulf war, since the matter, as judged by every measure of public opinion and the subsequent behaviour of the royals, has been so clearly resolved in our favour. But Woodrow Wyatt (February 27) is so discomfited by anything less than fawning praise of the royals that it has impaired his ability to read.

He writes that The Sunday Times "attacked the Queen". In fact, our editorial said "The Queen, of course, has behaved impeccably". He then goes on to say that this mythical attack was inspired by "fantasies of the Queen's personal riches". In fact, the editorial described reports claiming the Queen earned £1.8m a day as "probably wrong, because it includes many royal assets which properly belong to the State...". We simply argued that, whatever the income, it should be taxed.

Since he can muster nothing of substance he is reduced to a malicious and spiteful attack on me, more fitting for his News of the World column. Readers can make up their own minds of its relevance.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW E. NEIL,
Editor, The Sunday Times,
1 Pennington Street, E1,
February 27.

Clergy in waiting

From Mr Peter Carver

Sir, I served as a churchwarden for 20 years, in which time there was only one interregnum, lasting nine months (letter, February 18, 20). That period of sequestration could have been further reduced had the various prospective incumbents decided to accept the offer of the benefice. This, presumably, has suited the eventual (and present) appointment, made in 1970.

In keeping with canonical obedience, is it not time the clergy were told where to go and when to go?

Yours faithfully,
PETER CARVER,
The Croft, North Cave,
East Yorkshire,
February 20.

From Mr H. F. Purkess

Sir, Interregnum — why the fuss? Neighbouring and retired clergy cheerfully look after spiritual needs, the bishop steps in sometimes, whilst laymen can take up their duties to organize the parish house-keeping, perhaps for the first time.

Past clergy are better appreciated, new incumbents are delighted, and freed to get on with pastoral work.

Yours etc,
HUGH F. PURKESS,
Welshway Cottage, Perrotts Brook,
Cirencester, Gloucestershire,
February 20.

From Dr D. E. C. Eversley

Sir, The community forest now accepted in principle for south Hertfordshire and London poses a threat not mentioned by Ms Shoard. What worries us, as a county conservation society, is that the sums mentioned so far do not pay anything like the costs of compensating landowners for giving up income from farms, planting trees, and providing access — not to speak of compensation for dispossessed tenant farmers.

Afforestation of agricultural land within the Green Belt is a costly business. Until the countryside and forestry commissions, and the planning authorities, can assure us that they will not spoil large tracts of the Green Belt to meet the opportunity costs of planting trees, there will be opposition, and not just from ecologists like Marion Shoard.

Yours faithfully,
D. E. C. EVERSLEY,
(Joint honorary director),
The Hertfordshire Conservation Society,
29a Mill Lane,
Welwyn, Hertfordshire.

Heritage threat to Westminster site

From Mrs Christopher Patten and others

Sir, The Court of Appeal has recently ruled that the requirement to pay "special attention" to a conservation area's character should be the first consideration for those making planning decisions in such an area (report, February 7). The City of Westminster is about to deal with a planning application where this question arises in a sharply focused way.

The archdiocese of Westminster has applied to build a four-storey, multi-purpose building which will cover 1,830 square feet in the south-west corner of the Westminster Cathedral conservation area. This architecturally undistinguished building requires the demolition of a recently (and controversially) demolished cottage and changes fundamentally the views around the precincts of the cathedral. It would increase traffic within the conservation area and, far from preserving and enhancing the area's character, would be a gross intrusion into it.

Hardly surprisingly, English Heritage, the Royal Fine Art Commission and the Victorian Society have opposed the plans. Yet the archdiocese has ploughed on — even suggesting the possibility of other developments in the cathedral precincts. A private developer behaving similarly would be roundly condemned.

It is in the interest of the reputation of the archdiocese, as a custodian of its great inheritance, that it should withdraw the scheme. Failing that, we hope we can look to Westminster City Council or the Department of the Environment to act to preserve an important part of our heritage.

Yours faithfully,
LAVERNE PATTEN,
ROY STONG,
ELSTIE JANNER,
Morpeth Mansions,
Morpeth Terrace, SW1,
February 25.

Soviet future

From Mr Charles Janson

Sir, Anatole Kaletsky, in his article "Stay out of the Soviet infighting" (February 20), concludes that "the West must make clear that any boycott of the Kremlin is a response to human rights abuses and not an attempt to redraw the Soviet Union's boundaries or interfere in its internal affairs".

This, surely, is a false distinction. Any intervention by the West, including one over human rights, will be presented to the Soviet public as an interference. Paranoia is indivisible.

Fortunately, however, more and more Soviet people wish to break with their past and live under genuine law and in freedom, a system which contains the right to own and develop private property. The same Soviet people will, as we must, support republican movements for self-determination. A quarter of a million of them recently demonstrated in Moscow; and millions more listen to the now de-jure Radio Liberty.

Of course the threatened Soviet establishment will do anything to prevent the true westernisation of the Soviet Union. In this respect they are much more determined than their Tsarist predecessors, whose will to rule snapped. But they are doomed because there are no goods, human or material, that they can deliver.

I suggest that both Soviet well-being and Western security will be best served by our steady insistence on the inevitability of westernisation. Is this an indecent rejoinder to 70 years of insistence by the Kremlin that nothing could stop the communisation of the whole world?

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES JANSON,
39 Edwards Square, W8,
February 21.

No sleight of palm

From Mr M. J. Foxley

Sir, My council, with the help of the Prince's Trust for Cornwall, have planted over 2,000 trees of various varieties in addition to the palms which your brief report (February 21) alleges are intended "to make tourists believe that temperatures are warmer than they actually are".

Severe winters have taken their toll of Cornwall's mature palms and other exotic vegetation which flourish in the mild climate of the extreme south west.

Yours faithfully,
M. J. FOXLEY (Tourism and Publicity Officer),
Penwith District Council,
St Clare,
Penzance, Cornwall,
February 21.

Palace of varieties

From Mrs Brenda M. Boyd

Sir, Princess Alexandra's residence is named in the Court Circular this morning as Thatchers House Lodge. May we now expect other royal residences to update their names to late-twentieth century political figures — Buckingham Palace, for example, or Kensington Palace?

Yours etc,
BRENDA M. BOYD,
8 Templemore,
Weybridge, Surrey,
February 27.

1

1

[REDACTED]

L

PLAZA FINANCIERA
Headed to Top London
Miscellaneous
Estimated 100 years in West Saxon, Valuable
Freehold, Leasehold Acquired on concessional terms.
Please Reply to Box
No 2933

ANNOUNCEMENTS

BRITISH HEART FOUNDATION
THE HEART RESEARCH CHARITY
We're leading the fight against heart disease by finding research into its causes, prevention, diagnosis and treatment.
Heart needs a donation in your regional office or by direct payment to the British Heart Foundation,
14 Fitzhardinge Street,
London W1H 4DH

Kidney
Research Saves Lives
Please help with a donation now and a legacy later.

NATIONAL KIDNEY
RESEARCH
NATIONAL KIDNEY RESEARCH FUND
Don't Let It Leave Nephron Loss 75%
Registered Charity No 822697

Cancer Research Campaign
We fund one third of all research into the prevention and cure of cancer in the UK.
Help us by sending a donation or making a legacy to: Great Titmole
2 Carlton Way Terrace,
London SW1W 9AR.

Fighting cancer on all fronts.

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

Switch to a new generation game

Would you welcome sharing a mini-power station in your own back garden or basement with the neighbours if it were more efficient, cleaner, safer and environmentally friendlier than conventional equipment?

The idea of a small energy system to supply a street of houses, a block of flats, a factory or offices is being suggested as a solution to the problems of fossil-fuel burners and the politics of nuclear power.

Today, energy consultants who say small is beautiful are attending a London conference, where they will hear of several commissions for mini-power stations, which indicate that industry and institutions are beginning to view them as serious options.

Small power stations, in their simplest form, consist of an engine, similar to that in a commercial lorry. The enthusiasts say such a motor, with its support equipment, sited in the basement of an apartment block or group of dwellings is far more acceptable than huge smoke stacks or the risk of the breakdown of a large power station, which could affect hundreds of thousands of people.

Support is mounting for mini-power stations, which normally use almost all the heat and power generated, instead of allowing large amounts to escape.

Last week Thames Water awarded a £2.5 million contract for a self-contained project to recycle organic waste, known tech-

The idea of domestic power stations is now taken seriously. Angela Long looks at home-grown energy nically as biomass, that is piped into sewage plants. The gas given off by the organic waste will be used to power other plant equipment.

The City of London corporation has commissioned a mini-unit that works on the combined heat and power (CHP) method to heat and light 12 properties at a £25 million capital cost. The project is overseen by Citigen, the joint venture between British Gas and Utilicom, of France.

The Mayday Hospital in Croydon, south London, has broken ground with its contract for a mini-power station that the manufacturers say will save more than £30,000 a year.

The energy department, in a discussion paper published last year, welcomed the concept of mini-stations. The department says CHP could supply 30,000 megawatts of Britain's power needs by the year 2020, given government support. That would be between 25 and 50 per cent of the capacity expected by then.

Some large corporations, including Shell, ICI and Mobil, are showing interest in the CHP method, which can operate on a small or large scale.

David Andrews, an energy consultant, of Bath, Avon, describes a mini-power station as simply an engine driving a generator. He says: "Instead of dissipating the heat, which cooling towers do on conventional power stations, it uses the heat to warm the building. You could generate all the power Britain needs from mini-stations. Being realistic, however, I do not expect to see that come about, but the generation of five gigawatts (five billion watts) is possible in the next few years."

Mr Andrews says the standard 875-kilowatt engine in most existing mini-stations could give five megawatts of power. After that gas turbines are needed to complement the system.

The Mini Power Station Information Group claims National Power and PowerGen together produce 40 per cent of Britain's carbon dioxide emissions. The group says mini-power stations near or in buildings are three times as efficient as they use inherent waste heat for water or space heating, and could reduce emissions by about 35 per cent.

As privatisation is imminent, the time is hardly right to advise local electricity boards to overhaul dramatically their structure and hardware. However, PowerGen and National Power teams are assessing mini-power stations. Another advantage of small power stations is that they are quicker and easier to construct. The current issue of Electrical Review estimates that a small CHP station could be built and commissioned in less than six months, compared with the three to five years for a large power station.

Mini-source of heat and light: energy consultant David Andrews with a unit that is said to be more efficient than larger power stations

H. Leverton, of Windsor, Berkshire, a dealer in Caterpillar engines, is carrying out the first installation of this kind of generating equipment in Britain in the basement of the Mayday Hospital. Under the agreement with the hospital, Leverton takes responsibility for design, installation, operation and maintenance. The company is bearing the £400,000 capital cost of installing the engine, but recovers its investment by selling the heat and power generated to the hospital. The scheme has the approval of energy consultants.

Colin Boughton-Smith, of Energy Control, which the Croydon health authority commissioned to investigate alternatives, says: "The problem with mini-schemes at the moment is that there is no incentive for individuals or utilities to adopt them." Another setback lies in the "top-up" of electricity from the main grid that is regularly required to supplement mini-systems. At the moment the cost is punitive, he says.

How to set a bug to catch a bug

TWO engineers have developed a new way of detecting insect larvae in fruit or grain. They use sensitive microphones to listen to the munching. Dr Robert Hickling, of the National Centre for Physical Acoustics at Mississippi University, says the noise is a "distinct chewing sound, rather like standing next to a horse eating hay".

The development could help customs officers to prevent the importing of pests, and could be used by the grain industry to devise better protection of stored crops. A tenth of the grain stored in the United States is lost to pests every year. In the developing world the proportion could be 50 per cent. At present, fruit is checked at borders by cutting open samples. This, however, is unreliable. Listening for larvae ought to be more effective, if a system can be made sensitive enough to hear the crunching of their tiny jaws.

Microphones are to be used to catch the crop-destroying larvae at lunch

The idea has been around since the Twenties, but it needed modern electronics to make it work. Dr J.C. Webb, an American agriculture department engineer, first detected the sound of insects moving around inside wheat kernels and grapefruit in the early Eighties. A roomful of equipment costing thousands of dollars was used. Now Dr Webb and Dr Hickling claim to have developed a smaller and cheaper device that is almost ready to go on the market.

Dr Hickling says the sensor, operating in a frequency band between 800 and 900 hertz, gives the loudest possible signal. Higher frequencies are mopped up by the fruit's fibrous texture.

Listening in: head of a fruit fly

The agriculture department has concentrated on sensors to detect pests in grain. At present, investigators find them by shaking a kilogram of grain through a sieve.

Dr Hickling expects the sensors to cost only a few pounds and the associated electronics less than £25.

NIGEL HAWKES

Medical research at the double

MEDICAL and psychiatric research involving thousands of pairs of twins in Britain is being expanded through a new national unit whose establishment is announced today.

Identical and non-identical twins offer researchers many insights into the hereditary and environmental causes of illnesses, disorders and behaviour. Studies are helping to reveal the role of genes in coronary artery disease and diabetes, and psychiatric conditions such as schizophrenia and manic depression.

The National Twin Research Unit is being set up by the Institute of Psychiatry and King's College Hospital medical school in Camberwell, south London. The unit will use two existing registers of twins, consisting of more than 5,000 pairs, and hopes to enrol a further 10,000 pairs.

Robin Murray, the professor of psychological medicine at the institute, says: "The immense value of twins in scientific research rests on simple observations. Identical twins are the result of the division of a single fertilised egg, and so share all their genetic material. Any differences must be due to the differential action of environmental factors. In contrast, non-identical twins, apart from having shared a womb and being the same age, are no more alike than brothers and sisters.

"Comparisons of identical and non-identical twins can be used to explore the nature of both normal human development and the causes of important diseases."

Professor Murray, who gives a public lecture at the medical school today on the contribution of twins to medical and psychiatric research, says studies on alcoholism, skin cancer, obesity and back pain would be aided by the new unit. He adds: "We expect to contribute to big advances in the understanding of mechanisms of health and disease."

THOMSON PRENTICE

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

You must be SELFISH!

To Get a GOOD JOB in Computers

- Self-disciplined • Self-motivated
- Self-assured • Self-starter

Be a Self-starter - fill in the coupon below or telephone 0384 459221 (24 hr service) now!

Be Self-motivated - do it immediately.

In return we'll send you loads of information about employment prospects and how you too could move into a highly paid job in computers.

We'll also send you an aptitude test. Mark it and we'll advise you on your potential -

A valuable service Free of Charge.

Leave others to think about it - Be Selfish!

Comptech International Limited, FREEPOST, JESS LAKE, DUDLEY, WEST MIDLANDS DY5 3JX. (no stamp required)

Please send me free details of your Computer Career Development Programme

Name (Mr/Ms/Miss) _____ (day)

Tel No. _____ (even)

Present Occupation _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Age _____

Mr Walker, Priory Chambers, 40 High Street South, Dunstable, Beds LU6 3RZ

ANALYST PROGRAMMER £20,000++

This major international company needs Programmers with Ingres & Unix experience, computer related degree essential. Good work record. Successful candidates will be rewarded with excellent fringe benefits & prospects.

Call 071-439 8287 Sara Oliver ABC inc email

Consultancy seeking computer professional with view to joint venture for future company progression.

Age no barrier. C.V. in the first instance to:

Mr Walker, Priory Chambers, 40 High Street South, Dunstable, Beds LU6 3RZ

ALLEN Something New ...

The Company

ALLEN is a resource centre specialising in Information Technology.

IT specialists formed ALLEN with a commitment to provide top quality engineering skills to organisations, user departments and systems manufacturers.

ALLEN's excellent reputation has been earned by:

● SKILLS: Qualified engineers selected for their specialist technical skills.

● LEADERSHIP: Its managers possess both leadership qualities and technical expertise.

ALLEN's resource centre provides the client with a pool of high-quality skills on which he can draw at critical points in the project life-cycle.

ALLEN is able to respond with speed and quality to the many needs of computer users and system manufacturers alike. We pride ourselves on the flexibility provided by our "flat pyramid" management structure.

The People

ALLEN has at its disposal a team of top level engineers (see qualifications/skills files). These engineers, all high calibre (3-5 years at university and at least two years' experience in the industry), have been recruited by technical managers of equivalent background.

ALLEN today is a cohesive and stable force of over 150 people.

The Skills

ALLEN specialises in information technology - particularly relational database management systems and real-time processing.

Included in the wide variety of skills of ALLEN engineers are the following specialisations:

APPLICATION AREAS

Database applications Networks, telecommunications
Real-time software systems
Process control/automation
Avionics, Aerospace
Signal and Image processing Software engineering methodologies
QA

ALLEN P.O. Box 1725, London NW11 6LH
Tel. 081-900 2220 Fax. 081-900 1190

HARDWARE

DEC, IBM, BULL, HP, SUN, ICL, NCR, DATAPOINT, IBM PC

OPERATING SYSTEMS

UNIX (BSD and System V)
VMS, ELN, RSX-11M
MS-DOS, OS2
OS9, IRMX86

LANGUAGES

Assembly languages (various)
C, ADA, Pascal, Fortran, PLM, Coral-66, Algol, Cobol

DBMS

Ingres, Oracle, Sybase, DB2, DBase IV

ELECTRONICS

Design and implementation of
● Microprocessor-based systems
● digital systems (TTL, ECL...)
● analogue systems
VMEbus, MULTIBUS

The Clients

Our clients come to us from diverse fields

- Government bodies
- Large and small industrial organisations
- The financial sector
- Systems and software houses and OEMs

★★★★★

If you see a future within our group then please call us on 081-900 2220 and ask for Suzie Azoulay.

Information Technology

Consultancy

Project Control

Training

Information Technology

Consultancy

Project Control

Training

The new IT practice for the year 2000

Join our group of software specialists who are looking for new members.

I am Debbie Barnett and my practice specialises in RDBMS. If you are self-motivated, looking for something new and have 2/3 years solid experience with the Oracle, Sybase or Ingres toolsets supported by structured methodologies, Unix, C, C++, Fortran, Cobol and/or 4GLs: Uniface, Unify; then please call me on 081-900 2220 and/or send your CV to ALLEN Ltd, 4 Westholm, PO Box 1725, London NW11 6LH.

Attractive Bonus scheme

Communications

Analysis

Design

Database Technology

Communications

Analysis

Design

Database Technology

The new IT practice for the year 2000

Join our group of software specialists who are looking for new members.

I am Suzie Azoulay and my practice specialises in real-time software systems. If you are self-motivated, looking for something new and have 2/3 years solid experience of systems development on VAX under VMS or ELN, Unix, 68000, 8086 and/or C, C++, Fortran..., Networks and Telecoms: LAN, WAN, SNA, Protocols and Mobile Comms; then please call me on: 081-900 2220 and/or send your CV to ALLEN Ltd, 4 Westholm, PO Box 1725, London NW11 6LH.

Attractive Bonus scheme

Building martial hearts

T'ai chi, the gentle Chinese art, is being tested as a therapy for heart attack victims. Thomson Prentice reports

In its search for better ways to help patients recover from a heart attack, modern medicine is turning to an ancient form of exercise. The old and the new came together in a hospital gymnasium this week at the start of a research project to test the healing power of t'ai chi, a gentle branch of Chinese martial arts.

The first volunteers, men aged between 45 and 60 who have had an attack in the past few months, are being led by a qualified instructor through the slow, elaborate and elegant movements that characterise the discipline. The patients are taking part in a study that aims to show whether t'ai chi is more or less effective than a conventional fitness programme in enabling them to regain their health and self-confidence.

A generation ago, the standard treatment for heart attack victims was strict bed rest in hospital. During the lengthy convalescence that followed, physical activity was meant to be not much more than a morning stroll, and doctors warned that "overdoing it" could provoke another attack.

Today, heart victims are discharged more quickly from hospital, and encouraged to join cardiac rehabilitation programmes, and to take up exercise to a degree that many of them may not have known for years. The hope is that their lives will be enhanced, if not extended, as a result.

Few of the patients taking part in the study at the Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield, know anything about t'ai chi. Although practised by millions of Chinese, it has little more than a cult following in Britain. The origins of t'ai chi go back at least to the 14th century, when Taoist monks replaced the aggressiveness of martial arts with a softer form that they believed would integrate body, mind and spirit. The goal was a balance between yin and yang, the active and passive life forces in Chinese philosophy.

The belief that illness stems from an imbalance of these forces or energy patterns is central to traditional Chinese medicine. Acupuncture is one method of restoring the balance; t'ai chi is another.

The movements, performed in silence, are regarded as antidotes to stress and anxiety as well as improving posture, flexibility and breathing. "In China t'ai chi is widely accepted as being excellent for overall health, especially the functioning of the heart and regulation of blood pressure," says David Barrow, aged 43, who is training the patients in Sheffield.

Unlike aerobic exercise, t'ai chi does not significantly raise the pulse, but dilates blood vessels through relaxation, Mr Barrow says. He qualified as a t'ai chi instructor in Malaysia in 1974, and now runs classes in several British cities.

"When I heard about the cardiac rehabilitation programme at the Royal Hallamshire, I suggested that the hospital should give this method a trial," he says.

The idea was taken up by Kevin Channer, a consultant cardiologist, and Margaret Osborne, a cardiac rehabilitation nurse, at the hospital. "During the next two months we will have some patients going through t'ai chi classes, while others have standard exercises and a third group are simply given advice about diet, exercise and smoking," Dr Channer says. "Then we will compare the three groups, measuring their physical improvement and changes in their levels of anxiety and depression, to see whether one fares better than the other."

One of the first t'ai chi volunteers at the hospital is

'I will try anything that will make me feel I have recovered'

Balancing act: Dave Barrow leads Hallamshire patients through t'ai chi movements

John Rooks, aged 48, who blames his heart attack on the pressures of running his own business. "I had no interest in any exercise of this kind, although I used to play tennis and squash regularly before my illness," he says. "The classes make me feel pleasantly relaxed and I'm enjoying them, but it will be some time before I can tell whether they are doing me any good."

Derek Tolan, aged 45, a water operations manager in Sheffield, says: "I'm willing to try anything that will make me feel I have recovered. The t'ai chi exercises are strange at first but I'm enjoying them."

Frank Wright, aged 57, a heating engineer, had his heart attack on December 28 and spent two weeks in the hospital. "The exercises have doubled my energy and I can feel the benefits long after I leave the gym. I do them at home, too, and find them very relaxing."

Sister Osborne, who supervises the sessions, says: "The aim of rehabilitation is to encourage patients to put the experience behind them and show them that they can recover completely. The psychological benefits may be at least as important as the physical ones. T'ai chi seems to offer advantages in both categories. If we find at the end of the study that it really produces improvements, we may incorporate it permanently in our programme."

According to a study published this week by the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy, cardiac rehabilitation programmes result in fewer heart attack patients being readmitted to hospital because of anxieties about symptoms.

The society wants more such programmes, and Stuart Skyle, its spokesman, says: "We will be interested in the outcome of the t'ai chi trial. If it helps patients relax and relieves stress, it could win a bigger following."

MEDICAL BRIEFING Dr Thomas Stuttaford

Vitamins on trial

Within days of press reports a year or two ago that a high vitamin intake improved a child's intelligence, chemists' shelves were emptied by attentive, but ambitious, parents. Since then there have been conflicting reports on the value of an enhanced multivitamin intake in developing intelligence; the original results proved difficult to reproduce, and it was suggested that any observed improvement occurred only when the pupil was already under-nourished. The latest research, featured in last night's QED programme on BBC1, claims to have excluded this possible cause of statistical bias. Discussion of intelligence, with its hint of elitism, produces savage controversy. The egalitarian instincts of many doctors prevent them from happily accepting that it can, like any other characteristic, be inherited; and the implied suggestion that the supposed healthy nourishment provided by the nursery fare of the middle classes might reinforce an inborn advantage adds fuel to the fire. The misconception that the children of the rich live on a diet carefully balanced by nanny, whereas at the other extreme children are fed on choc bars, luncheon meat, biscuits and fizzy drinks, is as untrue as it is insulting. Faulty nourishment, as opposed to under-nourishment, occurs in all social groups. It has recently been said that the children most at risk from vitamin, mineral and protein deficiency are not those fed on burgers and chips, but those mistakenly reared on the fad diet, often overloaded with fibre, of the muesli belt.

To expect that high vitamin intake would open the doors to an Oxford college is unrealistic, but a daily multivitamin and mineral tablet would provide a safety net, always provided parents realise that some vitamins are toxic when taken in excess. Your children might be at the top of their classes, but it would be disappointing if they were suffering from the liver disease, rough skin and dry hair of vitamin A overdose, or if their carefully nurtured brains were distracted by the headaches, nausea, vomiting and diarrhoea of excess vitamin D.

Healing under the surface

A close relationship has grown between Kuwait and British medicine. Kuwait's citizens come here for specialist opinions and, in the past, many British doctors and dentists have spent weeks teaching and operating in Kuwait. One British consultant, determined to remain fit there despite the oppressive heat, spent an afternoon playing squash, but a combination of his schoolboy gym shoes and heavy sweating resulted in the erosion of the soles of his feet. Doctor became patient, and a pigskin graft was needed to repair the damage. An allograft of this sort acts as a biological dressing rather than as a transplant, for the graft does not "take".

Even better than pigskin is human skin from deceased transplant donors. Judicially used as a dressing in the treatment of severe burns, it can be life-saving; and so, anticipating heavy casualties from the Gulf, which mercifully have not materialised, the United Kingdom Transplant Service offered its expertise to British plastic surgeons to facilitate its provision. Human skin attaches itself by biochemical means to the wound so that all dead spaces, which might serve as pools for bacteria to multiply, are eliminated. Donor human skin retains the waterproofing epidermis which controls the rate at which fluid is lost from the wound, for, if it dries too quickly, the wound deepens, and as the moisture evaporates it cools the wound to a point where the white blood cells no longer operate efficiently and infection may supervene.

Culturing skin so that a graft can be made from the patient's own skin provides an even better material. This is a comparatively slow process, too slow to treat burns; but it is useful for the treatment of a wide variety of conditions, ranging from leg ulcers to the bulbous skin diseases in which great blisters ravage the skin's surface.

THE LOGIC.

The new Lancia Dedra is utterly faithful to the sporting heritage and values of Lancia's founder, Vincenzo Lancia. So, not surprisingly, it's a car that stirs the emotions.

The Dedra appeals to the head as well as the heart. Because for life-long protection, all exterior panels are made from 100% galvanised steel - backed up with a 6-year anti-perforation warranty.

The Dedra has rarely proven durability - Lancia have won the World Rally championship no less than nine times - with four consecutive wins in 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Specification? All versions have fuel injection. Power assisted steering.

Light alloy sports wheels and low profile tyres. Polished rosewood dashboard. Central Locking. And electric front windows with 'one touch' facility.

In addition they have a stereo system with double anti-theft facility. Twin body colour electric door mirrors with demist. Tinted glass. An electronic check control panel. As well as a rev counter. Front fog lights. Height adjustable driver's seat and steering column. Front and rear head restraints. Centre folding front and rear armrests and rear sun blinds.

A wind cheating Cd factor of 0.29 contributes to exceptional fuel economy on unleaded petrol.

Top speeds range from 112 to 124 mph and ABS is available on all models. Audi and BMW certainly can't match all that.

And every Lancia comes with a very important extra: total peace of mind.

This is because we cover you comprehensively with a 1-year manufacturer's warranty and Lancia A.A. 'Gold Star Service' with Homestart, Relay Recovery and 5 Star Service for continental motoring.

The Lancia Dedra from £11,995* to £15,995*. Now you can afford to let your emotions run away with you.

For further details call 190 and ask for Programme Lancia or return this coupon to Lancia Prepress, Benthall, Essex SS25 5SR. Prices* (excl. VAT) as shown at time of going to press include car tax and VAT but exclude variable on-the-road charges (road fund licence, motor tax, insurance, etc.) estimated to be £120 for 1.6, £140 for 1.8, £160 for 2.0, £180 for 2.0i, £200 for 2.0i 16V, £220 for 2.0i 16V 4x4.

1.6 ie 1.8 ie 2.0 ie

Name: _____
Address: _____
Postcode: _____

DEDRA. THE NEW LANCIA

Deader body than usual in the lobby

HIGH-POWERED parliamentary lobbyist engaged to high-flying Treasury minister fails to have lunch with him, vanishes instead, and turns up dead at the bottom of a countryside railway embankment. Suspects include fiancé, boss, envious sister, jealous wife, and cheated-out-of-inheritance claimant. Chief Inspector John McLeish, unused to politicians and smarmy persuaders, his knowledgeable DIT lady love Francesca away, sifts Scotland Yard through the evidence, over-relying on lovely Met officerette. Neel's insider feel for the subtle undercurrents of Whitehall and the boardroom combines with precise plotting and believable characters. Neel's third, every one a winner.

CRIME

Marcel Berlins

DEATH OF A PARTNER

By Janet Neel
Constable, £12.99

lines, £12.99). Another exquisite evocation of early 20th-century Egypt under the Brits, with nationalism rising, and CID chief Captain Owen trying to track down the perpetrators of attacks on civil servants, and a bomb outrage in a café. Boorish English businessman, ubiquitous gypsy dancer-thief, and lots of politically intriguing locals get in the way.

● And Did Murder Him, by Peter Turnbull (Collins, £12.99). Strange how few cities in Britain make successful settings for gritty police procedurals. Manchester and Liverpool, for instance, haven't made it. Glasgow, in contrast, is a splendid cop-city, full of dark alleys, seedy pubs, distinctive cultures, and ambivalent values. Turnbull is a superbly skilful chronicler of Glaswegian crime, with cops and criminals portrayed equally convincingly. Stabbed body of druggie discovered, his friend's fingerprints on a nearby knife. The evidence is too pat for the police of P Division. Further inquiries lead to a missing posh-voiced woman student, occasional resident of the deceased's squat; thence into Glasgow's respectable quarters. Pulses with authenticity and atmosphere.

● Flynn, by Lesley Grant-Adamson (Faber, £12.99). Laura Flynn, feisty private eye, looking into disappearance of frightened dress designer client, finds herself among dangerous stop-at-nothing property conspirators. Lesser customers include owner of missing monster cat; family matters intrude as sick granny wants to trace her son, Flynn's pa, and an ex-hubby reappears. Grant-Adamson's new heroine is stubborn, funny, irresponsible, courageous, and captivating.

● A Small Deceit, by Margaret Yorke (Hutchinson, £12.99). A rapist and killer, just out of prison; a minor judge with a minor secret. They recognise each other in an obscure guest house, both using false names. Gradually their lives converge, violently. The judge's long-suffering, unhappily trapped wife, his bland son and daughter-in-law, the woman with whom the killer lodges, become enmeshed. Yorke creates clammy tension in the most ordinary surroundings.

● The Mamm Zapt and The Men Behind, by Michael Pearce (Collin, £12.99). Another exquisite evocation of early 20th-century Egypt under the Brits, with nationalism rising, and CID chief Captain Owen trying to track down the perpetrators of attacks on civil servants, and a bomb outrage in a café. Boorish English businessman, ubiquitous gypsy dancer-thief, and lots of politically intriguing locals get in the way.

● Better Off Dead, by Denise Danks (Macdonald, £12.95). Street-wise unemployed computer hackette, Georgina Powers, distressed when best friend rock-star Carla Blue drowns after heroin overdose, not long after similarly terminal OD of mega-rocker Johnny Waits. Her suspicions awakened when not-yet-released tapes of Waits and Blue emerge in the cheapo street-market stalls. Georgina moves into the nasty world of music piracy, where sex and drugs and rock 'n' roll mean huge profits. Danks indubitably knows her musical underworld and her pop patter, but could do with a couple of edifying characters for variety.

● The Cruelest Month, by Hazel Holt (Macmillan, £12.99). Oxford librarian beamed by non-accidental falling book in the Bodleian Library. Widow Sheila Mallory, back among the dreaming spires of her studenthood, accidentally embroiled in the inquiries, finds shockingly relevant clues to the killing in her own past friendships. Cosy, traditional, warm-glowish sort of whodunit: a fast disappearing genre.

● Grave Responsibility, by Stacey & Storey (Barrie & Jenkins, £11.99). Almost Gothic tale of family loves and obsessions, leading to a doctor's bloody suicide in a car wash, and the simultaneous passing by gunshot of his mother and uncle in a decaying, secretive mansion, filled with memories, dummies, and unexplained visitors. Mama's diaries reveal long-gone scandals turned into deadly motives. The extant members of the family and their spouses and lovers, not one lacking eccentricity or malevolence, are counterpointed by the solid real-worldly Superintendent Bone. An unapologetically over-the-top tongue-in-cheek read: S & S take chances with suspension of disbelief, but sheer verve and imagination make it work.

Jennifer Johnston, with her powerful novel of a sleeping beauty still wounded by her past: worms has found out thy bed of crimson joy, and his dark secret love does thy life destroy

Something nasty in woodshed

Some memories", writes Jennifer Johnston, "are so joyful that you could hark forever in them; others you long to shove back, away, back into the darkness out of which they have sprung uninvited." In the normal course of events, growing up is an acceptance that memories, bad or good, must be marshalled into perspective, to provide a firm starting point for the next lap in life. However, incidents that traumatise prevent a natural development and cannot be absorbed, but must either be cured by the gentle science of psychiatry, or exorcised by violent means, if emotional maturity is ever to be attained.

Laura Quinlan has been blessed with beauty, wealth and social position, advantages that appear to have reconciled her complaisant husband to the fact that he is saddled with an extreme case of arrested development. She is haunted by the apparition of a woman forever on the run, and has long periods of total withdrawal when, fortunately, Teresa or Bridie or Katie or Nellie is on hand to see that she comes to no actual harm. She lives in a kind of enchanted Irish backwater, a Sleeping Beauty surrounded herself with thorns, with a Prince Charming, who has turned from his dozy bride to livelier company, but is still himself enough of a victim of enchantment to indulge her childlike escape from reality. Draining her life blood is a secret wound, the memory of a day of sexual abuse and death, the day when both Laura's parents were lost to her. Not surprisingly, she cannot bear a child.

Isabel Raphael on the haunting story of a plastic princess, traumatised, who cannot come to terms with a harsh world

When a second death removes the need for secrecy, Laura can start to come to terms with the past. Being Protestant, she is denied the use of the confessional in her father's church. He had always hoped that her mother would turn, but she had mocked him: "Haven't you got my house and my land and my beautiful body? What makes you think you should have my soul as well?" So his possession of mother and daughter remains tantalisingly incomplete. It is Laura's husband who brings home her "confessor", a teacher from a local boys' school who turns out to be a failed priest. Together Laura and Dominic move haltingly from safe confine-

THE INVISIBLE WORM

By Jennifer Johnston
Sinclair-Stevenson, £12.95

ment towards confrontation, the answer to the riddle of the summer-house and, at last, the understanding that they must each make their separate ways forward. My summary of this elegant novel is perhaps unkind, for there is much here to admire. Jennifer Johnston writes with her customary sensibility about a subject which genuinely creates psychological trauma, and her use of Blake's chilling verses as title and epigraph is mastery in its implications. There are some vivid characters: Maurice, the charming, casual husband who adapts whatever life gives him to suit himself, and Laura's powerful and outwardly successful father, perpetually frustrated by knowing that his wife has a quality that will always evade him. There is also a neat, cruel and utterly real portrait of the family that rejects the former priest, as he too is freed by a parent's death to grow up in his own way. As in her earlier novels, Ms Johnston deftly handles the interplay between present and past, and the subtly different perceptions of adult and child of the same occurrences. The dialogue runs fast and free, and restores the pace lost in Laura's bouts of introspection, in which there is more than a whiff of Onset. Aunt Ada Doom.

But two major improbabilities flaw this book, which in other respects is sympathetic and telling.

Could a teenager of the Sixties, who knows about rape and has the guts to escape for two years to an independent life abroad, enter the enchanted forest and lose herself there so completely? And could a mother, pledged to protect her child, recklessly court danger or else deliberately remove herself from the scene? "Lost at sea" is altogether too implausible and convenient an exit for so dominant a character. The mysterious summer-house might have preferred melodrama to a cop-out. It would have matched the skilful and deliberate symbolism of the secret garden, with its willows and its Wedding Tree, the paradise Laura and her confessor struggle to regain, only to find in its heart the serpent, the invisible worm that destroys the love and joy and peace of a child's Eden.

In the end, Dominic is free to go, sadder and wiser. But Laura? It is hard to believe that, even with the world all before her, she has the essential humanity to give, as well as take, life.

ne Multiyork Winter Sale.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY
30%-50% OFF
MADE TO ORDER
20%-25% OFF

IN ANY FABRIC FROM OUR 'TOP 200' RANGE
INCLUDING WARNERS,
BAKER, SANDERSON, PLUMPTON HOUSE AND LIBERTY.

SOFAS FROM £450
TO OVER £1,000.

(Start the New Year with upholstery guaranteed for the next ten.)

In our Winter Sale you will find vast reductions on the very finest handmade upholstery. There are fourteen traditional and modern ranges on offer, many of which are brand new for 1991. Everything is made-to-order with either fixed or removable covers in the fabric of your choice.

There are literally hundreds of top name fabrics to choose from including stunning new damasks, jacquard weaves and velours. Our superb reproduction furniture and made-to-order curtains are also on special offer, so make sure you visit your Multiyork showroom today.

MULTIYORK
Furniture Handmade by Craftsmen

OAK/MAHOGANY/CHERRY REPRODUCTION STOCK CLEARANCE
ALL UP TO 35% OFF
DESKS UP TO 45% OFF

SOLID OAK
GATELEG TABLE
List £950 $775

LOUIS PHILIPPE
STYLE BED
List £1555 $1195

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK 10.30 - 5.30. REMOVED FOR VIEWING. PLEASE RING FOR DETAILS OF LATE NIGHT OFFERING. 12.30 MONTHLY COST PAYMENT PLANS AVAILABLE. ASK FOR WRITTEN DETAILS.

PINCHLEY ROAD
PALMER GREEN
S. KENSINGTON
BROMLEY

071 722 7810
071 586 7514
071 589 2303
0273 206031
081 454 2253

SUTTON
WYBOROUGH
COLCHESTER
HORNCHURCH
LOUGHTON

081 543 3242
0323 693990
0206 42007
04024 70299
081 502 4123

CAMBRIDGE
MELLS NORWICH
READING
ST ALBANS

0223 313443
0379 834113
0603 825886
0734 583052
0127 838008

DENBY
SHEFFIELD
MANCHESTER
BRISTOL KINGSTON

0322 43913
0142 722801
081 839 4338
0272 212323
081 546 5040

History seen as brief encounters

SO MUCH research has clearly gone into Michael Ignatieff's Asya that you imagine it must have been written on the bus between libraries. It is, the dust jacket assures us, a love story; but its heroine, aged five when the book opens, 85 as it ends, lives through what appears to be the entire history of the 20th century. She witnesses the Russian Revolution; in Paris she swings in the Twenties, listens to the distant echo of Hitler's marching footsteps in the Thirties, and learns about bombs and BBC in London during the second world war.

It might come as some surprise then that Asya is above all a gripping yarn. It is a tale of battle and escape, torn allegiances and treachery, of yearning and broken illusions. At its heart is a close group of Russian émigrés buffeted by hurricanes of change, who come together and are wrenched apart. It is a tense process. Asya for one, who seems to have dedicated her life to leaving places in a hurry, loses her son once, her husband twice. Partings in fact begin to dictate the rhythm of the book — a series of station platform goodbyes convey the passing of the war.

But the novel, Ignatieff's first, is more at home with history and sweeps of time than he is with character. There is something too idealised about this woman, this icon of endurance and perseverance. And it is hard to get to grips with the fundamental contradiction in her personality: strength and resilience in the early part of the book — battling across the Black Sea, bringing up a child on her own — and her later

Sabine Durrant

ASYA
By Michael Ignatieff
Chato & Windus, £13.99
DEAR MR RIGHT
By Eileen Dewhurst
Plunkett, £11.95

capacity to lie down and settle into the role of little wife. It is this role after all that causes all the problems in Eileen Dewhurst's Dear Mr Right. James Marshall, tall, dark and widowed, is tired of being the amatory focus of every unmarried woman in the seaside town in which he lives. Dinner parties, with obligatory "James will drive you home, Fiona", have become a nightmare. So Mr Marshall, eager to recapture the peace and companionship of his happy marriage, decides to advertise for a wife.

So far, so comforting. Cozy environment, what with the refined setting and all those books. Easy, age-old subject — a man's search for a spouse. There are comic walk-on parts in the shape of Hilda, his uptight, lace-curtain-twitching half-sister; Harry, his man-about-town neighbour; and Mrs Moxon, the statutory motherly housekeeper. The personal column device (stifle those suspicions of structural laziness on the part of the author) seems set to introduce a stream of unsuitable women and a frothy comedy of sexual manners. But then ingenious Eve is found strangled in the dunes, and things never seem quite the same again.

This is an odd book. Its sudden change of tone — from sitcom to thriller — is disconcerting. And whereas the first major plot shock is wonderfully satisfying, the second simply leaves you baffled. Much of the novel seems to be a lesson in how to read character, in the importance of disregarding romantic first impressions, of listening to the evidence and not the whispering of one's own heart. So when in the final confrontation you find the rug pulled from under your feet, it feels as though you've fallen flat on your face.

There are comic walk-on parts in the shape of Hilda, his uptight, lace-curtain-twitching half-sister; Harry, his man-about-town neighbour; and Mrs Moxon, the statutory motherly housekeeper. The personal column device (stifle those suspicions of structural laziness on the part of the author) seems set to introduce a stream of unsuitable women

AUTHORS WANTED

Leading literary book publisher seeks manuscripts of all types: fiction, non-fiction, poetry, drama, scholarly and religious works. No new authors welcomed. Send for free booklet: NIS, Vintage Press, 506 W 54th Street, New York, N.Y. 10019 U.S.A.

War broke out in the Middle East in 1095... it is still going on.

A comprehensive atlas of the Crusading movement

Edited by Jonathan Riley-Smith

200 colour maps • 100 illustrations • 192 pages • £19.99

TIMES BOOKS
An imprint of HarperCollins Publishers

PATRICK O'BRIAN

THE NUTMEG OF CONSOLATION

"The best historical novels ever written."
RICHARD SNOW, NEW YORK TIMES

"He transcends his own genre... this novel brings his achievement to a new height."
ALAN JUDY, SUNDAY TELEGRAPH

"O'Brian provides endlessly varying shocks and surprises... The writing is as strong and delightfully various as the people and plots."
A.S. BYATT, EVERING STIRLING

HarperCollins 13.99

CINEMA: NEW RELEASES

Immigration sparks a clash of customs

After his massive hit with Rain Man, Barry Levinson allows himself an intimate, autobiographical reflection in Avalon (U, Curzon Video, Screen-on-the-Hill).

The wide-eyed, mischievous little Michael (Elijah Wood), watching everything and under everybody's feet, is evidently a self-portrait of the writer-director.

Michael represents the third generation of a Jewish immigrant family. The five Krichinsky brothers arrived in Baltimore before the first world war, and contributed from their slender earnings as paperhangers to bring parents, sweethearts, cousins and the rest of the clan from Europe.

The saga ranges backwards and forwards in time, but mostly takes place in the early Fifties, when the family is settled, modestly prosperous and looking back over 40 years of the immigrant experience. Michael's adored grandfather, Sam (Armin Mueller-Stahl), is the patriarch.

The collage of scenes from family life is intricately and seamlessly structured. At the ritual family gatherings the same topics, the same reminiscences, the same jokes, the same recriminations are reassuringly repeated year after year. Sam and his brothers work, grow old, retire. The young ones marry, have children, adopt more pronounced names and struggle to get rich.

Times change. With greater prosperity people move out into the suburbs. Television brings new business opportunities and new social habits.

Levinson has amusing and familiar memories of the thrills and frustrations of the early days of the small screen.

Avalon is a loving, nostalgic celebration of family life, but also an elegy for its loss. The old days have gone — when people were uncomfortably crowded in the city in their worker houses, falling over each other, plagued by in-laws, but together. "What happened to the family?" wails Sam, as the scattering of mourners leave his wife's funeral. Where once there were the great family feasts, the survivors now eat television meals on their knees. Sam himself will end in an old people's home.

David Robinson on Barry Levinson's

Avalon, Gerard Depardieu in GreenCard, C'est la vie and Buddy's Song

Levinson does not see it as an exclusively Jewish loss. "I think some of these things are responsible for many of the problems we have today, because the idea of a family unit goes back thousands and thousands of years and it's really only since the late 1940s that it started to come apart."

Levinson rigorously avoids the sentimentality endemic to this kind of subject. His economical, elliptical scenes are always cut before there is time for tears. The film is more often ebullient and comic than melancholy, though with the same underlying lyrical quality as his earlier and undervalued The Natural. The Baltimore locations, the vintage cars and television sets and Allen Daviau's subtle, muted photography contribute to the persuasive first-hand sense of period.

Above all, though, this is a film of people and performances. Even the background figures, the lookers-on at the family feasts, are perfectly cast; while in the foreground are the majestic little Armin Mueller-Stahl (most recently seen in The Music Box) and Joan Plowright, a specialist in matriarchal monsters of all causes, vegetarians and stamping out smoking. He is a carnivorous, chain-smoking, right-wing slob, but charming with it.

Peter Weir wrote and directed the film and his script is observant and funny, with an emotionally ambivalent ending that runs counter to the genre's conventions. The portrait of the Frenchman conforms opportunistic to American stereotypes of the continental as unhygienic but intriguing, with enviable savoir-faire in cuisine, culture and love.

The whole raison d'être of the film is Gerard Depardieu. This is not his first English-speaking part, but mercifully almost nobody remembers Marco Ferreri's 1978 disaster, Bye Bye Monkey. He turns his hesitations and mispronunciations into a wonderful comic tool. Whether taking the part of a gourmet waiter, cordially insulting health-conscious customers, or masquerading as an avant-garde composer at a Manhattan dinner party, he dominates every scene.

The character is evidently based on the actor himself, incorporating autobiographical confessions and even his personal tattoos. Depardieu is, in any case, now larger than life or than any character he plays. This great hulk, with his bulbous face, is a phenomenon on his own, persuading us that, against all probability, he can exert a romantic appeal upon all the women around him.

Of these, Audie MacDowell works bravely at the task of partnering this comic giant; and Weir has surrounded the couple with nice characters, notably Jessie Keaton as a diminutive and noisy neighbour. With its loving use of locations, this is a very New York picture — which makes it the more remarkable that it is a Franco-Australian co-production.

There is more French character and local colour in Diane Kurys' C'est la vie (12, Barbican), a childhood reminiscence of a holiday at La Baule les Pins in 1958. All Kurys' films have been autobiographical. In the best of them, Coup de foudre, she recalled the disruption in her parents' marriage when her mother fell in love with another woman. C'est la vie appears to record a later episode in the relationship, with the parents going through the crisis of separation.

The grown-ups' troubles only occasionally intrude upon their two young daughters, who have more urgent preoccupations. They join their three young cousins in explorations of the little resort, the beach, the murky rented house. There are adventures with dogs, cats and other children, innocent discoveries of sex and love, an attempt at arson. The summer's big event is that the smallest cousin learns to tie his own shoelaces.

Beautifully played by children and grown-ups alike (even

As a waiter or playing the part of an avant-garde composer, he rules every scene

Attraction of opposites: Gerard Depardieu and Audie MacDowell in Green Card with the parents going through the crisis of separation.

The grown-ups' troubles only occasionally intrude upon their two young daughters, who have more urgent preoccupations. They join their three young cousins in explorations of the little resort, the beach, the murky rented house. There are adventures with dogs, cats and other children, innocent discoveries of sex and love, an attempt at arson. The summer's big event is that the smallest cousin learns to tie his own shoelaces.

Beautifully played by children and grown-ups alike (even if Nathalie Baye smiles too much these days), this bitter-sweet reminiscence is something agonisingly familiar even to people whose beaches are less sunny and family lives less fraught.

Buddy's Song (12, Odeons Marble Arch and Mezzanine, Cannons Haymarket and Oxford Street) is a meandering story of a turbulent family who should clearly never have come together in the first place. Cherry Roger Daltrey is a one-time rock singer, still wearing teddy-boy suits and living out his retarded fantasies. Sharon Duce is his wife, a sharp little body with social ambitions and a job in computers. It is an uphill task for their clean-cut son Buddy (Chesney Hawkes) to reconcile them; though of course in the end he manages it through his music.

The dream of overnight success through video studios, pop records and videos is contemporary; but the writing and style of the film are reminiscent of British B-pictures of the Forties. They, however, had the merit of only being 80 minutes long. The film was directed by Claude Whatham and scripted, from his own novel, by Nigel Hinman.

Missing teeth score over lost roots

At the Berlin Film Festival, Geoff Brown is bemused by the jury decisions but impressed by the strong ethnic images

The woman at the door looked puzzled. "Is something wrong?"

Are the earphones no good?" she asked as I returned the set she had given me only five minutes before. "The earphones are fine," I replied. "The film is no good."

"Ah," she said with the tired voice of experience, "that is another problem." Perhaps it was inevitable: when a festival presents 25 films in competition, the law of averages does not work in the optimist's favour.

But, this being Berlin, there was always another port of call if the viewer was forced to beat a retreat. A salute to Robert Mitchum and Jane Russell rubbed sprocket-holes with a survey of Romanian documentaries from 1898 to the present; though what price The Romanian People Celebrate the 70th Birthday of Stalin when films such as Gentlemen Prefer Blondes were around? The International Forum of Young Cinema offered hardly souls a daunting line-up from cinema's advanced guard, topped off with a rare screening of the 12-hour version of Jacques Rivette's 1970 Out One.

There was also, inescapably, Berlin itself. Once the earphones were handed in, only a strong person could resist the lure of the Brandenburg Gate, free of wall and guards, its approaches populated by hawkers of trinkets from the former communist regime.

But duty soon called us back to the films, as it did for the competition jury — a motley bunch embracing, among others, the British producer Simon Relph, director of Reveries of a Fool, Volker Schlöndorff, and the performance artist Laurie Anderson. For many at Berlin, they executed their duty in the most bizarre way by allotting the top prize, the Golden Bear, to Marco Ferreri's House of Smiles, a cringingly whimsical tale of late-flowering love and lost false teeth, featuring Ingrid Thulin (once a Bergman regular) as a resident of an old people's home whose love affair with another resident reaches an impasse when her dentures go astray. If it sounds awful, believe me: it was.

The jury had better luck choosing the festival's best actor — Maynard Eziashi, for his performance in the title role of Mr Johnson (one of the two British competition entries), based on the Joyce Cary novel about cultural displacement. Mr Johnson is a tribal African working as a clerk in the Twenties to a young officer supervising the construction of a road through Nigeria's bushlands. He desperately tries to ape his employers, dressing spiffily and trying to join in the colonial chat ("That Hertfordshire," he unuses, "one of the most beautiful villages back home.") But tragedy lies in wait; and the director, Bruce Beresford, steers the story through its varying moods with hardly a wrong step. Pierce Brosnan, usually condemned to inferior films, heads the moustachioed colonial band; but the film belongs totally to Eziashi — mastery as the ebullient clerk trapped between two worlds.

Some thought Vanessa Redgrave would snatch the Best Actress prize for her extraordinary performance in The Ballad of the Sad Café. But Simon Callow's brave film (reviewed by David Robinson on Monday) was passed by completely; and the actress prize went instead to Victoria Abril for her sinuous performance in Vincente Aranda's Lovers as a widow who seduces a young lad into passion and murder.

The award for Best Director was shared between Ricky Tognazzi for his film about Italian football hooligans, Ultà, and Jonathan Demme, for his slick but queasy thriller The Silence of the Lambs. The film certainly deserved recognition for something, if only its ability to hold an audience in a vice. But many in the audience must have been wringing with pain at the story's sheer nastiness.

The film stars Jodie Foster as a graduate student of the FBI sent to interview a psychotic ex-psychiatrist with cannibalistic tendencies. The errand, of course, thrusts plucky Jodie into hideous perils, delineated in gloating detail. She must also act opposite that arch scoundrel Anthony Hopkins, as the monster who both excites and repels her. She survives, barely; so does the audience.

Outside the main prizes, the jury scattered special prizes and mentions like confetti. Marco Bellocchio's The Conviction, a foolish and ponderous exploration of a rape trial, and a Russian entry, Viktor Aristov's Satan, shared a special prize. Kevin Costner only received a mention for his epic endeavours on Dances with Wolves; maybe the jury thought the film's 11 Oscar nominations were enough.

Another special mention was given to Iran's entry, Masud Kimia'i's Snake Poet — a worthy, neo-realist drama set in a chaotic Tehran picking up the pieces of the eight year Iran-Iraq war. A far better sample of Iranian cinema lurked in the festival's market section: Water, Wind, Dust, by Amir Naderi, who enjoys the visionary gift of making simple images speak volumes. Domestic debris scattered over cracked earth; an abandoned baby; a lone well and bucket in a vista of sand; such shots crystallise the plight of his boy hero, battling drought across a desolate landscape to locate his missing parents.

Denmark made many friends with The Birthday Trip, a delightful first feature from a woman director, Lone Scherfig. The birthday boy is a lumbering, genial bear of a man, a beecher just turning 40; his trip takes him to Poland in the company of four friends seeking cheap booze and female companionship. Scherfig charts their roistering progress with a kindly eye for human follies. Not all the films kept festival director Moritz de Hadeln's promise of "cinema in the humanist tradition", but this one did.

WATERLAND

IT IS NOT DEFTEN THAT YOU ARE SO GRIPPED BY A PLAY

"compelling...exciting"

"compellingly original tour de force"

Season Ends March 9th

DIRECTED BY HETIE MACDONALD

DSHAW THEATRE

071-388 1394

5 OSCAR NOMINATIONS

INCLUDING BEST ACTOR Gerard Depardieu & BEST FOREIGN FILM

"A SPLENDID, MOVING, LYRICAL ROMANCE, BRILLIANTLY FILMED...A MASTERPIECE"

Christopher Tolkien SUNDAY TELEGRAPH

"DEPARDIEU IS A DELIGHT TO BEHOLD"

John Johnston SUNDAY TIMES

"A SPECTACULAR SWASHBUCKLER"

Time Hutchinson MAIL ON SUNDAY

RENE CLÉMENT and MICHEL SEYDOUX

GERARD DEPARDIEU

DE

CYRANO

BERGERAC

A FILM BY JEAN-PAUL RAPPENEAU

An Artificial Eye Production

Lumière

ST MARKS LANE, W.C. 2.20 5.15 8.15

PHONE 071-372 1014

Chelsea Cinema

206 KING ROAD 071-351 3742

RENOIR

BRUNSWICK SW 2.20

PHONE 071-372 1014

Phoenix East Finchley • Rio Dalston • Ritz Erixton

Arts Centre Coventry • Cinema City Norwich • Royal Spa Centre Leamington Spa • Showcase Peterborough

Gannon Reading • Warner Bury • Starts Friday 1 March: Coronet Nottingham Hill Gate Cannon Slough

Showcase Leeds • Lounge Leeds • UCI Sheffield • Chapter Cardiff • Warner Basingstoke

Waterside Stratford on Avon • Starts Saturday 2 March: Corn Exchange Cambridge (12 days only)

Starts Sunday 3 March: Duke of York Brighton

THERE'S SNOW SKI SALE LIKE IT!

Our best ski sale in years.

100's of half price bargains.

SALE NOW ON

Willapark

6TH SPECTACULAR MONTH

JEREMY THOMAS PRESENTS

A BERNARDO BERTOLUCCI FILM

The Sheltering Sky

DEBRA WINGER JOHN MALKOVICH

"MAGNIFICENT!"

SUNDAY TIMES

"GRAND SPECTACLE"

INDEPENDENT ON SUNDAY

"AN EXOTIC AND EROTIC MASTERPIECE"

DAILY EXPRESS

EXCLUSIVE WEST END PRESENTATION

PLAZA

LOWER REGENT ST. 071 497 9999

12.00, 2.50, 5.40, 8.30 FRI & SAT at 11.30pm

071-481 9313
TELEX 925088
DATE ADVERTISERS
TEL: 071-481 4000
USE YOUR ACCESS, AMEX, MERS OR VISA CARD

BBC 1

- 6.00 Ceefax
6.30 BBC Breakfast News with Nicholas Witchell and Laurie Meyer
9.15 Killy, Robert Killy-Silk chairs a discussion on grid children
9.55 Regional news and weather
10.00 News 10.05 Playdays from Edgobaston, Birmingham 10.30 Dish of the Day. Culinary ideas from Rosemary Moon 10.40 Brainwave. Quiz show
11.00 News, regional news and weather 11.05 People Today with Dotti Jones and Adrian Mills
12.00 News, regional news and weather 12.05 Rosemary Conley's Diet and Fitness Club. Exercise for the figure conscious 12.20 Scene Today. Music and conversation from Poble Mill 12.55 Regional News and weather
1.00 One O'Clock News and weather
1.30 Neighbours. (Ceefax) 1.50 Going for Gold. Quiz show with European contestants hosted by Henry Kelly
2.15 Film: Alice Adams (1935, b/w) starring Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray and Fred Stone. Serviceable adaptation of Booth Tarkington's tale of a snobbish small-town woman who feels her life is going nowhere and is determined to break free from her social constraints. The claustrophobic atmosphere is skilfully captured by director George Stevens and Hepburn has never looked better
3.50 Robby Dyer's Truck 3.55 Gordon the Gopher. With Philip Schofield 4.10 Joke-a-Day. Jokes from the comedy world
4.55 Newsround 5.05 Blue Peter. Children's magazine presented by Vicky Pattison, John Leslie and Dana-Louise Jordan (Ceefax)
5.35 Neighbours. (Ceefax) Northern Ireland. Sportsweek 5.40 Inside Out
6.00 Six O'Clock News with Anne Ford and Andrew Harvey. Weather
6.30 Regional News Magazines. Northern Ireland: Neighbours
7.00 Top of the Pops introduced by Jekki Brambles
7.30 EastEnders. Another slice of inner-city life. (Ceefax)

In a sensitive habitat underwater: Kate Beal (BBC1)

- 8.00 Tomorrow's World. More from the world of science and technology. A trip to the dentist could be something to look forward to with the development of anaesthetic radio waves currently on trial. Plus a feature on a robot that joined an assembly line at a glassworks factory in Sunderland and Kate Beal filming reporting from the world's first underwater plant garden, in New Guinea
8.30 Doctor at the Top: Happy Birthday, Sir Geoffrey. Update of an ITV comedy series of the Sixties, based on the "Doctor" books by Richard Gordon. George Layton, Robert Killy and George Layton are back on duty as the doctors, tonight a playing a 75th birthday present for Sir Geoffrey Layton, another character revived from the original series and once more played by Ernest Clark. Layton is also the writer. (Ceefax) Northern Ireland: Spotlight
9.00 Nine O'Clock News with Mervyn Lewis. (Ceefax) Regional news and weather
9.30 Open All Hours. Gentle Roy Clarke starring Ronnie Barker as Adair, the alternating shopkeeper, and David Jason as his nephew, Granville. Adair comes up with a scheme to boost sales, but ends up causing every customer of shoplifting (Northern Ireland: The Corner House)
10.05 Question Time chaired by Peter Sissons. Among the guests are John Prescott, Labour's shadow transport secretary, Dr Graham Leonard, Bishop of London and Dr Rana Iqbal, a Syrian writer and historian
11.05 Heartbeat. American drama series set in a Los Angeles medical clinic specializing in the needs of female patients. The problems of surgery are highlighted when a woman refuses to give up the baby she has been paid to carry. With Kate Mulgrew and Laura Johnson. Northern Ireland: Amateur Boxing 10.10-12.30am Heartbeat 11.55 News and weather. Ends at 12.05am

BBC 2

- 8.00 News 8.15 Westminster
8.00 Daytime On Two: Teaching today 9.30 Maths 9.45 French for beginners 10.00 For the very young 10.15 Job Bank 10.35 Who Me? 11.00 Moving House 11.20 Technology 11.40 Maths: the probability theory 12.05 Spanish for beginners 12.25 Update Europe 12.50 Teaching today 1.20 Charlie Chalk. Animated adventures 1.40 A musical fantasy journey
2.00 News and weather followed by You and Me (r) 2.15 Antiques Roadshow from Valetta, Malta (r) (Ceefax)
3.00 News and weather followed by Westminster Live 3.50 News, Regional news and weather
4.00 Catchword. English word games with Paul Cole
4.30 Fighting Talk. Sue Winterhall explores some of the myths and stereotypes surrounding AIDS
5.00 Film 91 With Barry Norman (r) 5.30 Holiday 91 (r) (Ceefax)
6.00 Film: Tarzan's Three Challenges (1933) Tarzan is summoned to an unnamed oriental land to escort a young boy, Kest, to the capital where he is to be installed as his country's leader. The dying king's evil brother attempts a coup and Tarzan must rescue his young son from a violent ritual. Jack Heston plays the role of his second and last time in this routine adventure directed by Robert Day
7.30 First Sight. Cambridge Blues. Antonio Higgo reports on the rise and fall of Cambridge as an English town. Wales. Friends in High Places. Northern Ireland: The British Empire. England: Midlands. The Midlands Report. Lancashire. Newsweek 11.40 Manchester: Close Up North. Southampton: Southern Eye. Plymouth: Western Approach. Bristol: Current Account
8.00 City Lights. The first of a new comedy series with Gerard Kelly as the Scottish bank clerk aspiring to literary stardom (Ceefax)
8.30 Top Gear. William Woollam returns for a new series with a report from Rotherham, the classic car show in Paris
9.00 Red Dwarf. Comedy starring Craig Charles and Chris Barrie as maverick in space. (Ceefax)
9.30 40 Minutes: Children of the Fire
9.30 CHOICE. In June 1989 two trains crossing the Ural mountains were ripped apart by a gas explosion which killed 600 and 800 critically injured. Stewart Watson, a British burn specialist who went out to the Soviet Union to treat the injured, arranged for five of the survivors, children in their early teens, to come to Manchester for plastic surgery. Deborah Parfitt's film covers the visit. In a strange country without their parents and unable to speak the language, the children were naturally apprehensive. Matters were not helped by the lack of an interpreter. But the youngsters were plucky enough not only to undergo the surgery and put a smiling face on the many photo-opportunities arranged by a PR-conscious hospital. One was with Mrs Thatcher at 10 Downing Street, which makes all it feel like a long time ago. (Postponed from January 17, (Ceefax))

Cycling along the evolutionary road: penny farthings (BBC2)

- 10.10 Bicycle Invention
9.30 CHOICE. Calling on what looks like the resources of every bicycle museum in the country, and a few abroad, David Taylor's bright little series tonight covers the evolution of the machine up to John Boyd Dunlop's pneumatic tyre in 1888. Taylor adduces good evidence that the real inventor of the bicycle, as of so much else, was Leonardo da Vinci. But Leonardo somehow failed to translate his ingenious doodles into reality. Taylor's series is a good one, for far away to read archive film or first-hand memories, Taylor relies heavily on dramatic reconstruction, using vintage vehicles, period costumes and an impressive range of locations that includes Britain, France, Germany, The Netherlands and Alaska. Taylor mixes social history and technology in an easily digestible form but this is a consumer's eye view that takes little account of bicycle manufacture as an important 19th century industry. (Ceefax)
10.30 Newsnight with Peter Snow
11.15 The Little Show. Derek Malcolm, Judith Macdonell and Beatrix Campbell choose their cultural highlights of the month
11.55 Weather
12.00 Weekend Outlook. A preview of Open University programmes
12.05am Open University: A Big Day for the Smaller Business. Ends at 12.35

ITV

- 6.00 TV-am
9.25 Gulf Report 9.55 Thames News and weather
10.00 The Time... The Place... John Stapleton chairs a discussion on both by Cressida Bonner
10.40 This Morning. Family magazine series presented by Richard Madeley and Judy Furriger
12.05 The Riddlers. Children's entertainment 12.25 Thames News and weather
12.30 News with John Suchet. Weather
1.20 Home and Away. Australian drama series 1.50 A Country Practice. Australian soap set around a community health centre in the outback
2.20 Snooker. Quarter final action in the Pearl Assurance British open from Derby introduced by Tony Francis
3.15 ITN News headlines 3.20 Thames News headlines 3.25 The Young Doctors. Australian medical drama
3.55 Owl TV includes a special report on barn owls, an item on being a zoo keeper and the things we can find in the fur of our pets 4.20 Cartoon 4.30 Sports. Children's drama set in a fast food restaurant
5.00 Home and Away (r)
5.30 News with Carol Barnes (Oracle) Weather
5.55 Thames News with news of the work of the Soldiers, Sailors and Air Force Families Association
6.00 Blockbusters. Bob Holmes hosts the general knowledge quiz for teenagers
6.30 Thames News
6.50 Emmerdale. Agricultural soap set in the Yorkshire Dales (Oracle)
7.30 Jimmy's. Another fly-on-the-wall look at the staff and patients at St James's Hospital in Leeds, the largest general hospital in Europe
8.00 Gulf News Report. The latest news report from the conflict in the Middle East. Followed by The Bill. Further. There is a continuation for Mike Dashwood (Jon Ross) in the top up show when Bailey (Nigel Terry), a violent criminal escapes from prison and threatens to kill him. But Det Sgt Meadows (Simon Rouse) is not surprised about Bailey's behaviour after hearing that Dashwood visited the convict in jail. (Oracle)
8.30 The Week's Winner. What will the prospect of peace mean to Iraq and its neighbours?

Grace and favour: Jeremy Brett and Daniel Massey (ITV)

- 8.00 The Casebook of Sherlock Holmes: The Problem of Thor Bridge. Baker Street's most famous resident comes to the aid of Grace Dunbar (Catherine Russell) who is accused of shooting another woman. The evidence against her seems to be conclusive but the wealthy Neil Gibson (Daniel Massey) is determined to use his power and money to save Grace from the gallows. Jeremy Brett's Holmes, intense and a touch neurotic, continues to be the best yet seen on television, with Edward Hardwicke as Dr Watson (Oracle)
10.00 News at Ten with Trevor McDonald and Julie Somerville. (Oracle) Weather 10.35 Thames News and weather
10.45 The City Programme presented by Steve Clarke and Danielle Donoughue. What bad guys cause the banks to cut their dividends? And a report from Eastbourne where the perfume industry is holding its annual conference to discuss the future
11.15 Snooker: The Pearl Assurance British Open. Tony Francis introduces highlights from the Assembly Rooms, Derby as the last two semi-finals are decided 12.30am Gulf News Report
12.35 Prisoner: Cell Block H. Aussie soap set in a female detention centre
1.30 Judith Krantz's 'I'll Take Manhattan. Part three of the plush American mini-series about the rise and fall of a publishing empire. With Barry Bostwick and Britain's Francesca Annis (r)
3.30 Hardball. Mervyn Cooke Charlie and Rex get friendly with an old Indian
4.30 America's Top Ten (r)
5.00 ITN Morning News with Anne Leach. Ends at 6.00

CHANNEL 4

- 6.00 The Channel Four Daily
9.25 Schools
10.00 News summary
12.05 The Parliament Programme presented by Sue Cameron
12.30 Business Daily Financial and business news service
1.00 Sesame Street. Educational fun for pre-school children
2.00 The Ancient Art of Cookery. Roy Strong and cookery expert Sara Paston-Williams visit the Stuart kitchens of Riddlesden Hall in their exploration of cuisines of the past (r) (Teletext)
2.30 Cutting Edge: No Asylum. A repeat of Monday's programme about former psychiatric patients, now having to fend for themselves (Teletext)
3.30 Land Of Hope. Episode eight of the Australian series chronicling two centuries of Australian history through the lives of one Irish-Australian working-class family (r)
4.30 Countdown
5.00 The Adventures Of Tintin. Episode 13 of The Treasure Of Rackham the Red (r)
5.05 The Oprah Winfrey Show. Oprah introduces the finalists of her nationwide search for the perfect model. Sumner Redstone's programme about former psychiatric patients, now having to fend for themselves (Teletext)
6.00 Kate & Allie. American comedy about two single women who share a Greenwich Village flat. With Jane Carruth and Susan Santo James (r)
6.30 Desmond's. More cutting humour set in a black barber's shop in southern London (r) (Teletext)
7.00 Channel 4 News with Jon Snow and Zeinab Badawi (Teletext)
7.50 Countdown followed by Weather
8.00 SpaceShip Earth. Why do people live where they do? What do changing patterns of settlement mean for the future of our planet? The second programme in the series uses the resources of modern geographical techniques to answer these and other questions

- 8.30 The Criminal House
9.00 CHOICE. It is the turn of Stelfe (Kate Buffery) to take centre stage this week, returning to her troubled family in the Caribbean after an unsuccessful marriage in the United States. She finds her father (Nigel Terry) still hooked on opium and cousin Andrew dying of cancer. Lady the black nurse (Maggie Smith) continues to maintain a calm and dignified presence as the white community disintegrates around her. There are hints of political stirrings as the son of the family cook takes up the cause of the island's poor blacks. Horace Ove's handsomely shot production maintains the leisurely pace of the opening episode, leaving no opportunity to allow the camera to scale up the lush sun-drenched scenery of Dominica, a landscape which is at once exotic and menacing. (Teletext)
9.35 Affairs Of The Heart: Mysteries of a Broken Heart. Health campaigns keep telling us to give up smoking, change our diets and take more exercise. If we want to avoid heart attacks, yet most doctors seem to follow no rules and scientists are coming up with radical new ideas which could overturn accepted beliefs about who is at risk and what should be done about it. (Teletext)

Promoting honesty as the best policy: Ray Wyrw (10.30pm)

- 10.30 True Stories: Gracewell.
9.30 CHOICE. Founded in 1988 by a probation officer Ray Wyrw, Gracewell is the only residential clinic in Europe devoted to the treatment of men who sexually abuse children. Wyrw has no illusions about the task. Many of his clients were themselves abused but he refuses to find excuses for them. And he prefers to talk about control rather than cure. His main aim is to get the men to be honest with themselves and face up to the realities of their behaviour. Robert Fleming's documentary is a salutary straight to the point instead of appearing with their faces or voices disguised, four national abusers stand four square before the cameras and tell all. They are shown at communal therapy sessions being forced to relive their crimes and submit themselves to critical questioning by fellow offenders. So far not one Gracewell "client" has been reconvicted, but Wyrw admits it is early days.
11.50 A Week In Politics. Former prime minister Lord Callaghan is interviewed about the Gulf war; and there is a profile of the Swindon parliamentary constituency that Labour must win in order to stand a chance of forming a majority government. Includes Channel 4 News - Midnight Special. Ends at 2.00am

TV VARIATIONS

ANGLO
As London except 6.00pm-6.30pm and 6.30pm-7.00pm
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45
Anglo News 5.15
Anglo News 5.45
Anglo News 6.15
Anglo News 6.45
Anglo News 7.15
Anglo News 7.45
Anglo News 8.15
Anglo News 8.45
Anglo News 9.15
Anglo News 9.45
Anglo News 10.15
Anglo News 10.45
Anglo News 11.15
Anglo News 11.45
Anglo News 12.15
Anglo News 12.45
Anglo News 1.15
Anglo News 1.45
Anglo News 2.15
Anglo News 2.45
Anglo News 3.15
Anglo News 3.45
Anglo News 4.15
Anglo News 4.45

● BUSINESS AND FINANCE 23-29
● LAW 30
● SPORT 31-34

BUSINESS

THURSDAY FEBRUARY 28 1991

Business Editor
John Bell

Delors attacks Bonn

GERMANY has been accused of reneging on its promises and dragging its feet on progress towards European monetary union by M. Jacques Delors, president of the European Commission.

M. Delors's spokesman said yesterday that suggestions from Bonn this week "did not fit" with the commitments made by 11 of the 12 member states when they agreed monetary union principles in Rome last October.

He is anxious about the open-ended state of the intergovernmental talks on monetary union and their eventual success, which would be threatened by German hesitation.

The specific betrayal alleged by M. Delors concerns the timetable for the establishment of a European central bank. The new German proposals merely suggest that the council of central bankers be rechristened and that the central bank itself be delayed for at least three years.

Comment, page 25

NAPF divided on recovery

Opinion about the prospects for recovery in the small company sector is divided at the annual investment conference of the National Association of Pension Funds in Eastbourne.

Last year, returns from smaller companies fell more sharply than the overall market, which saw its first fall in absolute terms since 1974. But that disappointment and deepening recession has not destroyed all the optimism.

NAPF attack, page 26

Cityvision buys

Cityvision, the video rental group, has bought 46 hire stores from the Video Store Group (in a receipt) for £2.4 million, bringing its total assets to 354 stores nationwide. Cityvision reported a profit of £16.4 million (£12.5 million) on a £78.4 million (£45.8 million) turnover. A 0.5p final dividend makes 1p (0.75p) for the year.

Tempus, page 25

THE POUND

US dollar
1.9160 (-0.0085)
German mark
2.9179 (-0.0086)
Exchange index
93.8 (-0.1)

STOCK MARKET

FT 30 Share
1877.8 (+22.8)
FT-SE 100
2348.0 (+25.8)
New York Dow Jones
2889.80 (+25.00)
Tokyo Nikkei Ave
26094.25 (-188.71)
Closing Prices ... Page 29

MAJOR CHANGES

RISKS:
British Aerospace 811p (+37p)
Lloyds 340p (+20p)
Nat West 307p (+17p)
Scott & Newcastle 725p (+14p)
Sage 388p (+30p)
Sage Group 295p (+18p)
Caledonian Robey 510p (+15p)
RM Douglas 450p (+35p)
Redland 641p (+13p)
Taylor Woodrow 282p (+17p)
WH Smith 'A' 352p (+13p)
Security Services 353p (+13p)
Sobe 391p (+10p)
Campari 245p (+15p)
Trafalgar House 243p (+13p)

FALLS:

Steeley 397p (-5p)
Leigh 328p (-7p)
Glaxo 918p (-11p)
Central TV 483p (-11p)

INTEREST RATES

London Bank Base: 12%
3-month interbank: 12%
3-month eligible bills: 12%
US: Prime Rate 9%
Federal Funds 6 1/4%
3-month Treasury Bill 6.04-6.05%
30-year bonds 9 1/8-9 7/8%

CURRENCIES

London: New York
£: $1.9160
DM: £1.9155
Sfr: £2.9179
FF: £2.9182
Yen: £132.18
Index: 93.8
ECU: £1.7072
ECU: £1.4229

GOLD

London: New York
AM $350.00
close $350.30 ($187.70)
New York
Comex $351.05-361.55

NORTH SEA OIL

Brent (new) $18.30 bbl ($17.95)
Dudley oil trading price

Cheaper home loans to follow half-point cut

By ANATOLE KALETSKY AND SARA MCCONNELL

THE City began immediate speculation about a further interest rate cut in next month's Budget after foreign exchange markets reacted calmly to the half-point cut in rates signalled by the Bank of England yesterday.

Millions of homeowners will feel the benefit of the rate cut as lenders began to announce lower mortgage rates for new and existing borrowers. But there is no rate cut for mortgages reviewed annually.

The Bank's signal to the money market was followed by cuts in the clearing bank's base rates to 13 from 13 1/2 per cent and lower mortgages from the main building societies. Share prices rose in response to the cut in base rates, with the FT-SE 100 index up by 25.8 points to 2,348.0.

Many industrialists and politicians remained dissatisfied with the modest scale of the monetary easing, attacking the government for doing "too little too late" to end the recession. But in City dealing rooms, the Bank's move was seen as astutely timed and deftly handled. As the pound quickly stabilised in the foreign exchange market after a brief dip of less than one penny against the mark, analysts' attention rapidly shifted to the timing of the next base rate cut and the possibility of an early election.

Money market rates, which had discounted yesterday's cut for almost two years, fell sharply again by the afternoon, implying another reduction was already priced into

	New Rate (%)	Old Rate (%)	New monthly payment (£)	Old monthly payment (£)
Endowment
£20,000	13.75	14.50	257.83	271.88
£50,000	13.75	14.50	487.00	513.55
£100,000	13.05	13.80	830.75	876.05
£150,000	12.95	13.70	1,059.91	1,117.71
Repayment
£20,000	13.75	14.50	292.07	294.15
£50,000	13.75	14.50	510.52	534.73
£100,000	13.05	13.80	888.86	908.94
£150,000	12.95	13.70	1,107.56	1,160.08

Source: Halifax Building Society

the market. The key three-month interbank rate fell by 1/8 to 12 1/4 per cent. This level would be consistent with another half-point cut at Budget time on March 19.

In the futures market, where speculators have been consistently more optimistic about the prospects for rate cuts, the short sterling contract rose to a level implying a Budget rate cut of a full percentage point.

Some analysts who thought a spring election might be imminent, argued that the Chancellor might opt for a full point cut to 12 per cent in the Budget, in order to please both the Labour Party and the government's industrial critics, who yesterday repeated their long-standing demands for a 12 per cent rate.

A full point cut in the Budget or soon after would have a further tactical advantage because it would give the government plenty of time to assure stability on the foreign exchange markets before taking a final decision on an election in May or June.

Despite support from some City analysts, however, which closed in London at DM2.9135, is still well below its midpoint of DM2.95 in the ERM, and is the second weakest currency in the system after the French franc.

The Halifax, the largest building society, promised its half a million borrowers on variable rate mortgages a cut of at least three-quarters of a point.

Jim Birrell, the Halifax chief executive, said: "This vindicated the position we took a week ago when we reduced the base mortgage rate for new borrowers to 13.75 per cent. We want to wait until the Budget before we finally confirm the rate that will apply to existing borrowers from April 1 but this will be down to at least 13.75 per cent."

But a Halifax spokeswoman said there were no plans to drop the 14.5 per cent rate set for 1.3 million Halifax customers on annual review unless there was a "dramatic cut". Borrowers could change to a variable rate mortgage but the Halifax does not envisage a lot of interest in this. Other societies said they did not want to encourage borrowers to change from an annual rate to a variable rate. The Nationwide had no plans to cut the 14.5 per cent rate for annual review customers. Cheltenham & Gloucester has cut rates by 0.75 per cent but is keeping annual review customers on 14.25 per cent.

Customers of the Leeds Permanent and the Bradford & Bingley on annual review will continue paying 14.5 per cent, although both societies have announced cuts of three-quarters of a point to 13.75 per cent in their standard rate. The Bradford & Bingley admitted it did not want to encourage its 300,000 borrowers, most of whom are on annual review, to change to the new variable rate.

Industry wants another 1%

By ROSE TIERMAN, INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

INDUSTRIALISTS yesterday called on Norman Lamont, the Chancellor, to cut interest rates to 12 per cent. They said the latest half-point reduction in base rates, to 13 per cent, though welcome, was insufficient for an economic recovery.

In industries such as retailing, manufacturing, house-building and vehicle distribution, the universal view was that a further half-point cut in interest rates was needed to rekindle consumer demand and stem business failures.

The urgency of a further cut was stated forcefully by Sir Clifford Chetwood, chairman of Wimpey, the construction group, who said: "Industry needs interest rates to fall to 12 per cent to stem bankruptcies, halt the rise in unemployment, and bring confidence back to house buyers. I urge the Chancellor, subject to money-market constraints, to be brave and bring rates down to this level by June."

John Banham, director general of the Confederation of British Industry, said further cuts will be needed to stimulate investment and recovery.

A spokesman for Tarmac, Britain's largest housebuilder, said: "We still need another 1 per cent cut before things start moving. We know there is a considerable pent-up demand from prospective house buyers because the volume of people looking around our sites is as heavy as ever."

Nigel Whitaker, a director of Kingfisher, the Woolworths retailer, said: "It is certainly a step in the right direction, but we will need more cuts before the effects feed through to consumer demand."

Car dealers have suffered from cuts in consumer and business spending. Sales fell to 2 million in 1990 from a five-year peak of 2.3 million during 1989. The industry expects demand to fall by 300,000 vehicles this year. Neil Marshall, economic adviser to the Retail Motor Industry Federation, said: "We welcome the further cut in interest rates but it is not enough. We don't think the picture will change until interest rates are 12 per cent or less."

Mr Marshall pointed to the need for further cuts in base rates to prevent the real cost of money rising as inflation falls.

A spokesman for Lucas Industries, one of Britain's leading engineering groups, said the interest rate cut should benefit its motor parts business in Britain, which accounts for 16 per cent of sales. But he too stressed the need for interest rates to fall by another point.

Miles Middleton, British Chambers of Commerce president, approved the Chancellor's cautious cut, and Peter Morgan, director general of the Institute of Directors, was the most upbeat. He said: "This reduction, following on the previous half per cent cut, should reassure business that the bottom of the curve has been reached and passed."

Comment, page 25

Norman loses the key to Yale

By COLIN CAMPBELL

NORMAN Davis, a former finance director of Yale and individual holder of more Yale shares than the board, has asked the Panel on Takeovers and Mergers to stop the bid clock in the Williams Holdings-Yale and Valor takeover.

Yale shareholders have until 3pm tomorrow to say whether they agree to the Williams' bid. Acceptance of Williams' five-for-four share offer has been recommended by Yale's board, led by Michael Montague, the chairman.

Mr Davis claims, however, that there is an alternative to being taken over, and shareholders should have the chance of considering instead that Yale and Valor's board be strengthened. He circulated fellow shareholders with his proposals, and asserts that the company adopted frustrating tactics in only sending him a shareholders' list by last Friday—in spite of his having asked for such a list 16 days earlier. As the Companies Act requires, he paid Yale and Valor £120 for the list.

Mr Davis argues that since there is only limited time to consider his alternatives the acceptance date should be deferred. The takeover panel, has, however, declined his request. It said that while its raison d'être was to protect all shareholders in takeover situations, and to uphold the takeover code, Mr Davis had not been able to satisfy the panel there has been, or is likely to be, a breach.

Mr Davis, meanwhile, asserts that there should be a "level playing field", and that because of the delays in securing the list, Yale shareholders are being denied full opportunity to consider an alternative.

In the absence of panel intervention, he has been told that he could seek an injunction.

Mr Davis says there is no opportunity to question Mr Montague and other directors about the "fire sale", nor the right to vote on compensation packages for him and others. He says that the absence of such opportunity denies them their elementary democratic rights to pass judgment on their board's actions. "I would like to reorganise the Yale and Valor board, if only to seek a better offer," Mr Davis says.

Mr Montague said: "I am so sad that Norman remains so unhappy."

Insurance rates set to increase

By NEIL BENNETT

TWO of Britain's leading insurers are preparing heavy rises in premium rates after announcing massive underwriting losses last year.

Commercial Union and General Accident said they were prepared to sacrifice market share to increase their rates on home, contents and motor policies.

Commercial Union's pre-tax profits fell from £151 million to £1.4 million in 1990 after its underwriting losses in Britain rose from £8.1 million to £145 million. In spite of the slump, the company increased its final dividend by 0.65p to 14p, making 23p for the year, up 7 per cent.

General Accident fell to a record pre-tax loss of £121 million from a £147 million profit in 1989. The group increased its final dividend by 5 per cent to 17.05p, for a full-year payout of 26.75p, up 7 per cent.

Peter Ward, CU's general manager in charge of operations in the United Kingdom, said the company was considering a further increase in household rates, despite the 10 per cent rise in January.

He said: "If the impact of that is a reduced market share, then so be it."

Nelson Robertson, GA's chief general manager, said the group would deal with its losses with further and more frequent rate rises. He said: "There is a distinct possibility there will be four increases in motor rates this year. We cannot go along with the deterioration in our profits."

Both insurers met large claims from the storms in January and February last year and suffered record subsidence claims during the dry summer.

CU said the storms had cost £40 million, while subsidence claims rose 147 per cent to £4 million.

Both companies also suffered a large rise in motor and theft claims. CU said there had also been a sharp rise in commercial fires, and it received 132 claims of more than £100,000 each, worth a total of £58 million in the year, up 142 per cent.

Tony Brend, CU's chief executive, said the company had provided for the cost of its £7.35 million stake in Levitt, the collapsed financial services company, in the figures.

He said the company was still considering taking legal action against Chase Manhattan Bank over the purchase.

Mr Brend said CU hoped to reopen its office in Kuwait soon, but he expected claims to be small since the company's policies excluded war damage.

Tempus, page 25

Provisions made: Tony Brend, of CU, which had a stake in the collapsed Levitt group

No Kuwait oil 'for nine months'

By MARTIN BARROW

OIL production in Kuwait will not start again for nine months, Sheikh Salem al-Sabah, governor of the emirate's central bank, said, adding that nearly 650 of its 900 oil wells were on fire.

The Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the oil producers' cartel, is expected to order an immediate resumption of pre-war output quotas to drive oil prices back to a benchmark price of $20 when it meets on March 11.

Saudi Arabia, which increased output to 8 million barrels per day to compensate for the loss of Iraqi and Kuwaiti crude, may take the lead by returning to its quota of 5.4 million barrels, supporting higher oil prices to boost revenues needed to cover the cost of the war effort.

Oil traders in London marked the benchmark April Brent crude up 52 cents to $17.75 a barrel while in New York, American oil futures traded 43 cents higher at $18.80.

Petroleum products also strengthened. On the Rotterdam spot market, petrol rose $11 to $233 a tonne while naphtha, the chemical industry feedstock, was up $11 at $226 a tonne.

The further half-point cut in base rates to 13 per cent sent share prices soaring to their highest for seven months in London. The FT-SE 100 index rallied to close 25.8 higher at 2,348.0, recovering from a dull start that saw it more than 15 points lower.

Hopes of an early end to the Gulf war also boosted shares and sentiment benefited from a firm start on Wall Street, which showed an early 25 point gain in active trading.

Markets, page 26

Lloyd's war risk premiums tumble

By JONATHAN PRYNN

LLOYD'S war risk insurance premium rates for Middle East bound marine and air cargo have tumbled or been abandoned on hopes of peace in the region.

War risk rates for Saudi Arabian, Israeli and Turkish ports have been dropped by the market's war risk rating committee. Insurance rates for these ports will revert to the usual worldwide voyage rate of 0.0275 per cent.

The rate for marine cargo calling at Iranian ports has been reduced.

Rates for cargo bound for Qatari, Bahraini and other

Gulf ports have been cut and air cargo rates have also fallen. Further rate cuts can be expected in the next few days as the risk to shipping and commercial aircraft recedes further.

Lloyd's premiums reached 6 to 7 per cent at the peak of the war and the company has had virtually no marine claims.

The only significant claim to have resulted from the war, so far, is the $228 million claim for 15 Kuwaiti Airways aircraft, but the claim may be reversed if the planes can be recovered intact.

Pay less. Invest more.

5p

That's all we, at Foreign & Colonial, charge out of every £25 you invest in the stockmarket. Just 0.2%.

Compare this with £20 you would be charged by a stockbroker or £1.12p by a unit trust manager.

By paying less in charges through our Private Investor Plan, you can invest that much more in the successful stockmarket companies that we have carefully selected.

For once, less really does mean more.

Shouldn't you seriously be considering investing with the world's most experienced investment trust manager?

For your copy of our Private Investor Plan brochure and application form, phone Eleanor Brett on 071-628 8000 during office hours or our 24 hour number below. Alternatively, post the coupon today.

Share in the success.

24 HOUR PHONE SERVICE 071-454 1404

Foreign & Colonial

INVESTMENT TRUSTS

For a copy of our Private Investor Plan brochure and application form, send the coupon to Foreign & Colonial Management Limited, PO Box 2, Twickenham, Berkshire RG1 0NW.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

PLT/28.2

Foreign & Colonial Management Ltd is a Manager of six Foreign & Colonial investment trusts and a member of IIRU. Charges exclude Government stamp duty (minimum 50p). The value of shares can fall as well as rise and past performance is no guide to the future.

Slow recovery to start this summer says NIESR

By ANATOLE KALETSKY, ECONOMICS EDITOR

THE recession will end in the early summer, as Britain's gross domestic product starts to grow again in response to lower inflation and rising consumer spending, the National Institute of Economic and Social Research says.

The economy's recovery, however, will be slow and unemployment will continue to rise well into 1992, reaching 2.5 million towards the end of this year, the institute predicts in its quarterly economic forecast, published yesterday.

The institute believes the government will achieve its main policy objectives of reducing inflation towards levels seen in Continental Europe and defending the pound within its European exchange-rate mechanism band.

The large balance of payments deficit will remain for the indefinite future and will be the main constraint on growth after the recession.

As a result, Britain will have to accept slow growth in output, low investment and high unemployment for many years ahead.

The institute forecasts a small decline in gross domestic product in the current quarter, followed by no change in the spring and growth at an annual rate of 2.4 per cent from July onwards.

This recovery could be achieved without any significant changes in either monetary or fiscal policy and would be compatible with a continuing sharp fall in industrial investment, which would not bottom out until the last quarter of the year.

The forecast assumes that bank base rates will be at 12 per cent at the end of the year, although further cuts would be expected in 1992.

The broad thrust of fiscal policy will remain unaltered in the Budget, but the slow-down in the economy will lead to a swing in government finances, from a surplus of £2 billion this year to a public sector borrowing requirement of £3 billion in 1991-92.

The institute says that the kind of "spontaneous" recovery being forecast would depend mainly on a reduction in consumer savings, encouraged by the expected fall in inflation. It adds that the retail price index will be rising by only 4.2 per cent by the fourth quarter and inflation will continue to fall further, averaging less than 3.5 per cent in the eight years ahead.

However, the long-term costs of this reduction in inflation would be substantial. GDP will grow by 2.4 per cent on average from 1992 to 1994 and then slow to an average of only 1.9 per cent until the end of the century, the institute predicts. Unemployment will peak at 2.6 million next year then average 2.5 million during the rest of the decade.

The institute argues that interest rates will have to remain high in Britain for at least another year because sterling joined the ERM at "an artificially high rate".

But it does not believe that overvaluation of the currency is a fundamental problem for the economy's long-term performance. It assumes that the pound will fall over the next two years to the bottom of its ERM band at DM2.78 and will eventually be permanently fixed at that level in a full monetary union with Germany.

An alternative simulation assumes that the pound is devalued by 5 per cent in the second quarter of 1992. This produces a 0.3 percentage point improvement in the growth of GDP in 1992 and 1993, but no further benefit from then onwards, because the institute assumes that all Britain's gains in competitiveness are eventually lost through higher inflation.

Inflation would jump 0.6 percentage point in 1992 and 2.6 percentage point in 1993.

Price boost: Chris Greentree, chief executive of Lasmo, which had record production

Dearer oil leads Lasmo to £83m

LASMO, the oil exploration and production company, increased net profits from £61.1 million to £83.1 million during 1990, benefiting from higher oil prices and record production levels.

The company increased production by 20 per cent to 86,100 barrels per day of oil-equivalent and achieved average sterling prices of £12.32 a barrel, up from £10.76. Chris Greentree, chief executive, forecast average prices of £20 a barrel this year, or £10.40 at current exchange rates.

Earnings rose from 15.8p a share to 21.1p. A final dividend of 4.75p a share increases the total dividend by 13 per cent to 8.5p a share. On the International Stock Exchange Lasmo shares rose by 11p to 366p.

Times, page 25

Profits rise 17% at Pifco

By PHILIP PANGALOS

PRE-TAX profits at Pifco Holdings, the electrical appliances manufacturer, climbed 17.7 per cent to £1.81 million in the six months to end-October despite the difficult market for consumer durables. Turnover rose from £12.6 million to £13 million.

The interim dividend goes up from 3.25p to 3.5p on earnings up from 12.5p to 14.7p. Mr Michael Webber, the chairman and chief executive, said coffee makers, fans and hair driers had been the star performers. Pifco has more than £8.7 million in the bank and its investment income soared from £296,000 to £338,000. The news lifted the shares 10p to 246p.

Arrow trial told of 'unique' methods

By OUR CITY STAFF

A BANK official counting the take-up of Blue Arrow shares from the company's record 1987 rights issue told an Old Bailey jury yesterday of "unique" methods employed after the deadline of the offer.

Jennifer Bond, a registrar official with Lloyds Bank, said she had "never encountered" a situation when a merchant bank advising on the issue wanted to make a late purchase of the rights.

She said she was asked by County NatWest, an adviser to the issue, to include 34 million shares in the employment agency in its final total. Mrs Bond said because of the move she kept the applications counted by Lloyds separate from the figure claimed by County when she faxed the merchant bank the results of the cash call.

The defendants are alleged to have misled the market by taking up shares in the rights after the deadline at 3pm on September 27, 1987.

Mrs Bond said it was clear there was a low take-up. Lloyds counted a take-up of nearly 192 million shares before being told County had a further 34 million.

Mrs Bond said she would have questioned with her superiors whether the County move could count towards the total "because it would be unusual to accept shares after the closure of the rights issue".

County NatWest, the parent NatWest Investment Bank, UBS Phillips & Drew Securities, the broker, and seven individuals who advised on the issue deny conspiracy to defraud.

The trial continues today.

Liffe to trade on Eurotrack

THE London International Financial Futures Exchange (Liffe) is to start trading futures contracts on the FT-SE Eurotrack 100 share index from June 26. The Eurotrack index, started last October, is a real-time index covering continental stock markets and closely matches monthly indices used by institutional fund managers.

The London Traded Options Market, expected to merge with Liffe shortly, plans to start options trading on the Eurotrack 100 index as soon as liquidity has built up in the futures market.

Liffe and LTOM already trade contracts on the FT-SE 100 share index of British stocks. The Chicago Board Options Exchange has taken a licence from the International Stock Exchange to trade options on the FT-SE 100, Eurotrack 100 and the new combined Eurotrack 200 indices, possibly early this summer.

Andersen fees increase by 40%

Andersen Consulting, the management consultancy firm that specialises in information technology, increased its fee income in Britain by 40 per cent to £130 million last year.

A survey of top consulting firms commissioned by Andersen found, however, that most expect no growth this year. The survey suggested that the management consultancy industry had income of £2.3 billion last year, considerably higher than some industry estimates.

Record rises to £4.74m

Improved margins helped Record Holdings, the Sheffield power tool maker, unveil pre-tax profits marginally ahead of £4.74 million (£4.72 million) in the year to end-December, in spite of a decline in turnover to £34.8 million (£37.7 million).

Turnover from the home market fell to £24.4 million (£25.6 million) while exports were down to £10.4 million (£12.1 million). Earnings slipped to 10.7p (11.4p). The final dividend is held at 2.45p, making 3.6p (3.45p).

BOC finance job Ian Clubb, formerly with British Satellite Broadcasting, Carless, Woodside Petroleum and International Thomson Group, joins The BOC Group as finance director tomorrow and will be appointed to BOC's board on March 14.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Net profit declines 6.1% at BTR Nylex

BTR Nylex, the 62.5 per cent-owned Australian affiliate of BTR, the industrial conglomerate, reported a 6.1 per cent fall in net profit to 1990 to Aus$489 million (£200 million). The company said automotive, building products, commercial interiors and consumer products were the worst affected sectors, but that its Asian operations were buoyant.

The company's net profit included a Aus$35.3 million abnormal loss due to rationalisation and redundancy costs. Sales fell 2.4 per cent to Aus$177.67 million. BTR Nylex declared a 50.97 per cent to Aus$177.67 million. BTR Nylex declared a 50.97 per cent franked final dividend of 6.5 cents a share, up from a fully franked 6.25 cents, making a full-year payout of 11.75 cents against 11.25 cents.

Akzo profit slumps 30%

AKZO, the Dutch chemicals group, was disappointed with the 30.5 per cent fall in 1990's net profits to 663 million guilders (£201 million). Akzo said the Gulf war made 1991's outcome difficult to predict, although the fourth quarter showed a 61.4 per cent plunge. The dividend was cut to Dfl 6.50 guilders from Dfl 8.00 for the year.

Shares halted at Ambrose

SHARES in Ambrose Investment Trust, the split capital investment trust due to be wound up by the end of next month, were temporarily suspended pending an announcement on Friday on the result of a poll for the company's voluntary liquidation. River Plate & General Investment Trust said it was considering making an offer for Ambrose.

Eleco falls to £2.2m

PRE-TAX profits at Eleco Holdings, the building products to specialist contracting group, fell to £2.24 million in the six months to end-December, against a restated £2.52 million. Turnover was £29.6 million (£33 million). The comparative results have been restated to exclude discontinued activities. Operating profits fell from £2.2 million to £1.42 million, while rental income was halved from £700,000 to £350,000. Interest receipts of £464,000 compared with payments of £379,000. Earnings per share slipped from 5.6p to 4.9p, although the interim dividend is held at 2.3p.

Asko shares weaken

SHARES in Asko Deutsche Kaufhaus, the German retailer, fell DM16 to DM780 yesterday after Tuesday's announcement that Klaus Jacobs, the Swiss businessman, and Asko Deutsche Kaufhaus had bought a 33 per cent stake in Adia, the Swiss employment group, from Orni Holding, the Swiss investment group.

'New firms' top closures

BUSINESSES are being set up faster than they are failing, Eric Forth, the small firms minister, claimed. He said that VAT registrations would confirm that companies setting up last year exceeded those closing. He was launching Keys to Growth, a publication that shows how small businesses succeed.

RECENT ISSUES

EQUITIES		Interest Rates
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10
Adia Resources	107	Prudential (50p)	10

Girobank plc Base Rate

Girobank announces that with effect from close of business yesterday (27th February 1991) its Base Rate is reduced from 13.5% to 13% per annum.

Reg Office: 10 Milk Street London EC2V 8JH
Reg No: 1950000

With effect from the close of business on Wednesday, 27th February 1991 and until further notice, TSB Base Rate is decreased from 13.5% p.a. to 13% p.a.

All facilities (including regulated consumer credit agreements) with a rate of interest linked to TSB Base Rate will be varied accordingly.

TSB Bank plc,
60 Lombard Street, London EC3V 8EA

National Westminster Bank PLC

NatWest announces that with effect from Wednesday 27th February 1991 its Base Rate is reduced from 13.50% to 13.00% per annum.

All facilities (including regulated consumer credit agreements) with a rate of interest linked to NatWest Base Rate will be varied accordingly.

41 Lothbury London EC2P 2BP

MORGAN GRENFELL

Morgan Grenfell announces that its Base Rate is reduced from 13.5% to 13% per annum with effect from 27 February 1991 until further notice.

All facilities (including regulated consumer credit agreements) with a rate linked to Morgan Grenfell Base Rate will be varied accordingly.

Morgan Grenfell & Co. Limited

Member of The Securities Association

23 Great Winchester Street, London EC2P 2AX

Lloyds Bank Base Rate.

Lloyds Bank Plc has reduced its Base Rate from 13.5 per cent to 13 per cent p.a. with effect from the close of business on Wednesday 27 February 1991.

THE THOROUGHbred BANK.

Lloyds Bank Plc, 71 Lombard Street, London EC3P 3BS.

HILL SAMUEL MERCHANT BANKERS

HILL SAMUEL BASE RATE

With effect from the close of business on 27th February, 1991 and until further notice, Hill Samuel Bank's Base Rate is reduced from 13.5% to 13% per annum.

All facilities (including regulated consumer credit agreements) with a rate of interest linked to Hill Samuel Bank's Base Rate will be varied accordingly.

HILL SAMUEL BANK LIMITED

100 Wood Street, London EC2P 2AJ

A Member of The Securities Association.

BASE RATE

Coutts & Co have reduced their Base Rate from 13.5% to 13% per annum with effect from the close of business on Wednesday 27th February 1991.

All facilities (including regulated consumer credit agreements) with a rate linked to Coutts Base Rate will be varied accordingly.

Coutts & Co
440 Strand, London, WC2R 0QS

BARCLAYS BANK BASE RATE

Barclays Bank PLC and

Barclays Bank Trust Company Limited announce that with effect from 27th February 1991

their Base Rate decreased from 13.5% to 13%.

BARCLAYS

BARCLAYS BANK PLC AND BARCLAYS BANK TRUST COMPANY LIMITED. REGISTERED OFFICE: 54 LOMBARD STREET, EC3P 3AH. REGISTERED NUMBERS 1026167 AND 920880.

Fair omens for more interest cuts

No sooner are base rates cut than financial markets look forward to the next time. March 19, Budget day, is naturally a strong favourite and 12 per cent by the end of March not impossible. Having missed earlier windows of opportunity in the currency market to cut interest rates, the Chancellor is trying to exploit the subtleties of the ERM game, even if cautious half point cuts leave business dissatisfied.

Fingers must still be crossed that the foreign exchanges will allow a continuing stream of cuts, but the omens are fair. Sterling has benefited from the slight dollar recovery against the mark. Despite falling against the German currency yesterday, the pound is still marginally above the franc at the bottom of the ERM league. Any immediate strain in the system is therefore down to Spain's peseta, which has been permanently on its own at the top.

The main importance of the latest rate cut is to trigger a widespread trimming of mortgage rates and therefore speed the fall in retail price inflation.

Optimists already look for the headline figure to fall from 9 per cent almost to 6½ per cent in three months and much lower figures are within reach by the autumn.

This can unwind inflationary expectations rapidly. Skill shortages and booming historic profits were still holding up wage settlements until recently, as the embarrassing blip in the CBI figures for wage settlements indicated. Inflation is now the biggest remaining prop to wage claims so earnings growth could come down sharply.

The big unknown in projections of second half economic recovery, however, is the state of consumer confidence. Leading sectors report consumer interest far duller than in the early Eighties or mid-Seventies recessions, when companies rather than consumers faced the biggest problems.

The mortgage rate is one key variable which needs to keep coming down and community charge cuts would also help confidence. On past performance, rising unemployment may not be as important as logic might dictate, provided the fall in inflation leads people to believe that the worst is known and over.

One surprisingly significant indicator is the stock market, which may already be exerting a strong positive influence. Share prices have risen about 14 per cent in the past six weeks, taking dividend yields down to 5 per cent at a time when short-term dividend growth may be lower than for many years.

The London market will surely find it hard to drag share prices up more than 4 per cent further in the short-term and a correction seems more likely within a week or two. Any correction should, however, be modest and temporary. A headlong reversal seems unlikely unless Wall Street influences turn particularly nasty. The public may not rush for power shares with its usual recent enthusiasm for privatisation issues but smiling faces in the City should bring more enthusiasm in the high street.

Sorry Jacques

First Britain, now Germany. The roll call of those uneasy about the pace of progress to a common eurocurrency is growing. Latest discordant notes came from Germany's draft monetary treaty presented to the intergovernmental conference this week which, to close followers of the debate in Brussels, looked guaranteed to upset in some way almost every other member of the European Monetary System.

It took less than 24 hours to rattle Jacques Delors, architect of the plan under which Europe would have an embryo central bank in 1994. Yesterday, the president of the European Commission accused Germany of reneging on its promises and dragging its feet on progress towards European monetary union.

M Delors' spokesman said that suggestions tabled this week by Bonn did not fit with the commitments made by 11 of the European Community's 12 members in Rome last October. He is anxious about the open-ended state of the intergovernmental talks on monetary union and their eventual success would certainly be threatened by any sign of German hesitation.

The specific betrayal alleged by M Delors concerns the timetable for the establishment of a European central bank and comes down to a disagreement over a definite article. The conclusions of the October Rome summit said that at the start of the second phase in 1994, "the new community institution" will begin. The new German proposals merely suggest that the council of central bankers be rechristened at that time and that the central bank itself be delayed for at least three years. The German government says that "a" new institution would thus arrive on the scene in 1994 but M Delors sees this as a dilution of his own schedule for monetary union.

All of which is music to the ears in London, which never agreed to the Rome text and which has openly pleaded with Bonn to slow moves to a single currency. Now Germany, like Britain, is objecting to the degree of political control that the Delors plan envisages over the European central bank. The Germans want an institution that could operate as freely and independently as the Bundesbank. The pioneer of this argument remember, was one Margaret Thatcher.

Working to keep lights on at Philips

Jan Timmer: taking stock as president of Philips

WHEN, in 1920, the owners of Philips, then a humble Dutch light bulb maker, formed a holding structure "to protect the company against the risk of a takeover", it was either a case of ingenious foresight or the planting of seeds for ultimate destruction. This Philips proudly proclaimed in a recent group profile.

If there was ever an entirely bid-proof company, it must be Philips. Of a total of 277 million Philips shares in issue, only ten carry voting rights. These are owned by the wealthy Philips family and friends. The decision taken in 1920 is indirectly linked with the deep-rooted problems that the company is now facing.

Today, Philips will announce an estimated loss of 4 billion guilders (£1.2 billion) for last year, essentially the price for years of complacency and mediocrity.

The exact size of the loss matters little, since most of it is accounted for by the £4.5 billion restructuring programme instigated by Jan Timmer, the Philips president. The changes are intended to reduce the company's hyper-diversified activities and workforce. The question is whether Mr Timmer's are swinging too late, as Philips' reputation for being a company that is too big to fail is being torn to pieces.

Philips' fundamental problem lies in its haphazard diversification and management deficiencies. Working for Philips used to be considered an attractive alternative to the Dutch civil service, a mentality that gripped the company's managers. Unlike their competitors from Japan, America or Germany, Philips was well protected from the realities of financial markets. While this was good for research and development, Philips failed to cash in on the ideas generated by its scientists. Although Philips invented audio and compact discs, the Japanese sell most of them.

Philips is Europe's second largest electronics company after Siemens, producing a bewildering range of products, including toasters, electric razors, light bulbs, computers and electronic chips. In short, anything that can be plugged into a socket. However, with the exception of records, made by Polygram, its 80 per cent owned subsidiary, and light bulbs, the company lags behind competitors.

Philips' biggest disasters have been in electronic components and computers. The group's sitting computer business, which incurred losses of several million guilders in 1989, was up for sale last year, but there were no bidders because of the difficult position that most of Philips' larger European competitors are in at present. Even greater losses were incurred at the components division. The business, which amounted to 15 per cent of sales in 1989, suffers from high investment at low return, while facing tough competition from Japan. Mr Timmer is forging links with competitors in an effort to protect the hard core of the business, which is strategically important, particularly on the consumer electronics side.

Consumer electronics, the largest subsidiary, accounting for more than 40 per cent of sales, is the most profitable.

Philips' production costs, however, compare unfavourably with those of Japanese rivals Sony and Matsushita (Panasonic), an imbalance that is ironed out mainly by EC tariffs on East Asian imports. But import tariffs, assuming a successful outcome of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) talks, are likely to fall during this decade.

Philips' net profit margins, 2.4 per cent in 1989, and much lower in 1990 even without provisions, are the lowest among the world's largest electronic companies. In some ways, Philips is comparable to Siemens, the German electronics group that suffered similar problems in the late Seventies. In the Eighties, Siemens restructured its operations into a few core divisions. Although Siemens' difficulties were never quite as deep, the exercise took almost ten years. Philips does not have that kind of time. Nor does it have the funds.

While Siemens had, and to some degree still has, a considerable cash mountain, Philips was highly geared, at 90 per cent of shareholders' funds, at the end of 1989. Mr Timmer's restructuring programme, is not a simple cost-cutting exercise. If it is to succeed, it must lead to a reduction in the number of business divisions, and a substantial rethink of production policy. That said, if Philips was to concentrate on consumer products and light bulbs, it would be exposed to the most competitive end of the electronics market. This is the company's chief dilemma.

This year, Philips will celebrate its 100th anniversary. Amid the celebrations, 50,000 of its employees, one in six, will lose their jobs. The days when Philips was a simple light bulb factory are long gone, but it is by no means a coincidence that light bulbs remain one of the company's few healthy operations. The history of Philips may yet turn full circle.

WOLFGANG MÜNCHAU
European Business Correspondent

Insurers make a big mistake

THE big insurers would like to blame their appalling performance last year on the weather, but the numbers do not add up. Commercial Union's 99 per cent fall in profits to £1.4 million, and General Accident's record loss of £121 million after a £147 million profit in 1989, were caused by more deep-rooted problems than a couple of storms and a dry summer.

Discounting claims for storm damage and subsidence, and the cost of reinsurance renewals, CU would have made a £99 million profit in the year, while GA would still have suffered a £10 million loss.

The slump in profits was caused at both companies by their general insurance business in Britain. At CU, the underwriting loss grew from £8.1 million to £145 million, while GA's grew 127 per cent to £462 million. Motor claims soared, while CU paid out on 53,000 thefts at an average £600. There was also a sharp increase in arson attacks on commercial property, a common phenomenon during a recession.

The multitude of excuses for the underwriting losses boil down to a single fundamental error. CU and GA, along with the other main insurers, wrote too many bad responses to oil price volatility. Lasmo has meanwhile got on with the business of running a business. Last year net profits rose from £51.1 million to £83.1 million and earnings from 15.8p a share to 21.1p.

Lasmo

AS ONE of the world's purest plays on the price of oil, Lasmo shares have yo-yoed from 360p to 502p and back to 366p in the past year. Who, though, six months ago, would have predicted that oil prices would collapse on the outbreak of war and rise when peace was imminent?

Contemptuous of gut responses to oil price volatility, Lasmo has meanwhile got on with the business of running a business. Last year net profits rose from £51.1 million to £83.1 million and earnings from 15.8p a share to 21.1p.

More significantly, cashflow from operations after tax rose from £147 million to £234 million. Only a relatively small proportion of this increase can be attributed to higher average oil prices, which in sterling terms rose by just 15 per cent to £12.32 a barrel. Cashflow all but covered capital expenditure of £253 million, which rose by £100 million. The market's perception is that Lasmo had a poor year with the drill bit, but the company tapped 149 new oil and gas wells. These will contribute to future cashflow, and oil and gas reserves rose again, even after record production of 86,100 barrels per day of oil-equivalent.

Gearing of just 7 per cent means that a 13 per cent increase in the dividend to 8.5p a share can be repeated this year even if oil prices weaken and earnings are static. Enterprise Oil offers a higher yield but Lasmo is good value for long-term oil price bulls.

Cityvision

MORTGAGE rate cuts, a lower base rate, and increasing hopes of an end to the Gulf war, all on one day. Could a consumer company like Cityvision ask for anything more? Well, yes, actually, abolition of the poll tax would do the video film rental group a power of good.

Pre-tax profits for the year ended November 30 at £16.4 million, up from £12.5 million, on a 71 per cent increase in turnover to £78.4 million, show there was life in the video market for at least part of last year. But the results mask a deterioration in the second half, which continued into the first six weeks of the financial year, so it may be 1992 before profits really move forward.

Earnings improved only from 7.07p to 7.75p a share after the one-for-six rights issue last March. The group is, however, cash positive and cash generative, and yesterday expanded its chain to 854 outlets with the £2.4 million cash purchase of The Video Store Group. The deal brings 46 stores and £4.5 million of turnover.

Cityvision claims a 20 per cent share of the British video rental market, and believes it can win more. The public still rents roughly a million videos a day, and a £10 million industry advertising campaign to promote renting can only benefit Cityvision.

Profits could reach £19 million this year, and possibly £21.5 million next year. At 50p, the shares trade on prospective ratings of 6.8 and 5.6, respectively. But best wait for poll tax developments before buying aggressively.

THE TIMES CITY DIARY

Supporting role for Ronnie

RONNIE Jacobson, one of the most colourful stockbrokers in the Square Mile, is stepping down as a partner of Jacobson Townsley, the firm he has run with Barry Townsley for the past 15 years. Jacobson, a snappy dresser who has seen the best part of 30 companies to the market, steps down at the end of April, but will not be breaking all his financial ties. "I am retiring from the partnership but will remain a consultant to the firm on the corporate finance side," says Jacobson, aged 52. "I hope to continue to haunt the City for many years to come." A fan of Tottenham Hotspur for 45 years - he even holds shares in the club, to the dismay of Townsley, who has long supported Arsenal - Jacobson denies he may bail Spurs out of financial difficulties. "I'll support them by going to their games and even taking up rights if necessary," says Jacobson, who hopes to pursue new interests in music, the theatre... and sport.

NIGEL Lawson, the former Chancellor, dealt in billions of pounds when handling the nation's wealth, but it appears he can be canny when it comes to his own money. Nesta Wyn Ellis, his biographer, claims he once handed his barber a 50p tip after having a £15 haircut. The barber, noticing he had

Nash makes cash

TREVOR Tarring, chairman of Metal Bulletin, the publishing group that reports news week, knows a good investment when he sees one. His private portfolio includes two Frazer Nash 1.5 litre sports touring cars, one of which he bought 33 years ago for the princely sum of £100. Today it is worth more than £50,000 and there is no shortage of potential buyers. Tarring, a dedicated vintage car enthusiast who also has a half share in a 1908 11.5 litre Napier racer, restored the cars himself and even makes spare parts that are not readily available. He is busy restoring a 1929

Austin Seven for his daughter Emma - a generous gesture, considering she once rolled one of his prized Nash cars, putting it out of action for several months. "I thought it would be better if she drove her own car," he jokes.

WORD that Norman Lamont hopes to go to the cinema on Budget day has captured the imagination of film buffs in the City. The list of films he may care to see now includes High Noon, Apocalypse Now, Tango and Cash and The Money Pit. The Color of Money is a favoured candidate, but less optimistic tips include Ransom of Fortune, The Sting and The Man who Fell To Earth.

Trial by noise

THE persistent sound of drilling caused an expensive two-hour interruption to proceedings of the Blue Arrow trial in Chancery Lane, London, yesterday. After saying that the noise was making it impossible for him to continue, Justice McKinnon retired, as he put it, to find out "what the hell was going on". The irate judge reappeared 45 minutes later to announce that an arcade was being built next door. He adjourned the court until 2pm. To the collective horror of the press corps, whose members are having a tough time staying awake as it is, lunch will be taken at midday in future and court will resume at 1pm to enable the necessary drilling to take place before the midday break. However, Justice McKinnon's negotiating skills - along with his sense of humour - were called into question later in the afternoon when the drilling resumed.

Called to account

A LETTER sent by Coutts & Co to its largely aristocratic clientele, giving warning that current account charges are about to rise, could be far more effective than the bank intended. From next month, they will have to keep £3,000 in their current account to avoid quarterly charges of £30 plus 75p per entry. One outraged customer and City Diary reader, who has the best part of £200,000 in his Coutts deposit account, has decided to change banks rather than comply with these new requirements. "If you think of it in terms of £3,000 at 13.5 per cent, that means it will cost me about £405 a year just to keep that sum in my current account." He is, nevertheless, amused by the explanatory notes to the letter, which read: "We are giving great attention to reducing still further the number of customers looked after by each manager and his team." The customer adds: "By jove, they jolly well are..."

JON ASHWORTH

Dividend increase 7%

★ Operating profit of £1.4m despite exceptionally difficult trading conditions in the United Kingdom and other major non-life markets.

★ Underlying increases of 13% in life profits and 20% in life premiums.

★ First quarter storms cost £55m and property subsidence claims £47m.

★ Good profit contribution from the Netherlands and improved result in the United States.

HIGHLIGHTS
	12 months 1990 Unaudited	12 months 1989 Audited
Premium income	£3,596m	£3,525m
Operating profit before taxation	£1.4m	£150.5m
Profit attributable to shareholders (note)	£22.2m	£173.9m
Earnings per share	3p	21.7p
Dividend per share	23.0p	21.5p
Shareholders' funds	£1,235m	£1,708m

Note: Profit attributable to shareholders includes realised investment gains after taxation of £20.8m (1989 £81.9m).

The proposed final dividend of 14.0p per share will be paid on 17 May 1991 to shareholders on the register at the close of business on 21 March 1991. The proposed final dividend will cost £60.0m (1989 £56.9m). Shareholders will be offered the choice of receiving fully paid ordinary shares, rather than cash, in respect of all or part of the final dividend. Details will be circulated to shareholders on 3 April 1991.

This announcement does not constitute full group accounts for the year. Copies of the full group accounts, which have not yet been reported on by the auditors, will be circulated to shareholders on 21 March 1991 and delivered to the Registrar of Companies after approval at the Annual General Meeting which will be held on 16 April 1991. Members of the public may obtain copies of the accounts after 21 March from Commercial Union plc, Shareholder Relations Service, St Helen's, 1 Underneath, London EC3P 3DQ (telephone 071-383 7500 ext. 8060).

Commercial Union plc

Wereldhave income falls

THE decline in the British property market has hurt direct investment income at Wereldhave, the Dutch property group. In the year to December, net investment income fell 13 per cent to 95.1 million guilders (£28.8 million). Wereldhave, which took over Peachey Property in 1988, said in June it was having difficulty selling its trading portfolio properties at a profit. Net assets per share fell 4.5 per cent to £1.66. A £1.37 final dividend makes £1.8, unchanged.

NAPF says 'keep chairman's chums' out of the boardroom

By COLIN NARBROUGH

THE National Association of Pension Funds, whose members manage £200 billion of assets, are pressing for radical changes in the role and duties of directors to improve the running of British companies.

Clive Gilchrist, chairman of the association's investment committee, sees the issue of corporate governance requiring immediate attention, but wants changes to be instituted on a voluntary basis.

The NAPF wants to increase the number of non-executive directors on company boards and split the roles of chief executive and chairman where they have been fused. Mr Gilchrist underlined that he wanted "real" non-executives appointed, not "chums" of senior executives, as this would fill an accountability gap evident in many British companies.

Mr Gilchrist, speaking on the opening day of NAPF's annual investment conference at Eastbourne, East Sussex, was sceptical about the value of the long-running debate over short-termism, in which pension fund managers have been accused of neglecting industry's longer term investment needs in order to boost their pension fund performance in the short term.

Though he accepted that in the frontier years of the Eighties, fund managers might have been keener to trade rather than invest in securities, he said the evidence of short-termism was unconvincing. He said: "We have been getting much anecdotal evidence, but nobody really knows what is going on."

A NAPF study on the criticised practice of performance measurement, which traces the relative success of investment funds, concluded that this instrument had been of significant value to investment managers over the past two decades.

Arguments that frequent performance measuring encouraged high share turnover and short-termism were found to be inconclusive.

General Accident

RESULTS FOR 1990

This statement does not comprise the audited statutory accounts for the year ended 31st December 1990, which will be published on 8th April 1991. The statutory accounts for 1989 have been audited without qualification and filed with the Registrar of Companies.

	1990 £M	1989 £M
Premium Income
General Business	3,045.8	3,100.2
Long Term Business	413.5	381.3
	3,459.3	3,481.5
Investment Income	429.9	462.7
NZI Bank Result	(6.3)	(47.6)
Estate Agency Result	(23.3)	(20.5)
Underwriting - General Business Result	(461.7)	(203.8)
Long Term Business Profits	25.2	26.9
	(36.2)	217.7
Less Interest on Loans	85.1	64.5
	(121.3)	153.2
Less U.K. Employee Profit Sharing Scheme	-	6.2
	(121.3)	147.0
Profit (Loss) before Taxation	(121.3)	147.0
Taxation - U.K. and Overseas	(25.7)	32.1
	(95.6)	114.9
Profit (Loss) after Taxation	(95.6)	114.9
Minority Interests and Preference Dividends	(2.4)	(13.7)
	(93.2)	128.6
Long Term Business Profits - GA Life 1988 Valuation	-	9.5
	(93.2)	138.1
Profit (Loss) for the year attributable to Shareholders	(93.2)	138.1
Earnings per Ordinary Share	(21.7p)	32.6p
Dividend per Share	26.75p	25.0p
Net Assets per Share	330p	399p
Principal exchange rates used in translating overseas results
U.S.A.	$1.93	$1.61
Canada	$2.24	$1.87

Notes

- Under a Scheme of Arrangement sanctioned by the Court of Session under section 425 of the Companies Act 1985 and effective on 5th July 1990 the shareholders of General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation plc received for each share then held, two new shares of 25p each fully paid in General Accident plc. Comparative figures for 1989 earnings, dividends and net assets per share have been restated.
- Investment income includes, in 1990, £10.6m representing amortisation of U.S. deep discount bonds (1989 £12.6m which was not credited to earnings).
- The NZI Bank result includes gains and losses both realised and unrealised on investments held for trading purposes.
- The transfer of shareholders' profit from the long term business fund is stated gross of taxation and on a current year basis.

Analysis by Territory of General Business Premium Income and Underwriting Result

	1990 £M	1989 £M	1990 £M	1989 £M
U.K.	1,175.9	(230.9)	1,043.5	4.7
U.S.A.	827.2	(79.9)	918.4	(84.4)
EC other than U.K.	166.8	(48.8)	171.9	(23.4)
Canada	348.4	(4.8)	377.3	(20.4)
Pacific	293.5	(53.0)	356.4	(21.8)
Other Overseas	97.9	(15.0)	105.7	(5.8)
London Market Business incl. internal reinsurance	116.1	(29.3)	127.0	(50.7)
	3,045.8	(461.7)	3,100.2	(203.8)

Life Department

UK new business production was as follows:

	1990 £M	1989 £M
New Life and Annuity Premiums
Annual	50.7	53.2
Single	63.9	41.7

Final Dividend for the year ended 31st December 1990

The Directors have decided to recommend to the shareholders at the Annual General Meeting to be held on 1st May 1991, a final dividend on the Ordinary Shares of 17.05p per share, calculated on the revised number of shares held following the Scheme of Arrangement referred to in Note 1 above (1989 equivalent 16.25p), payable on or after 1st July 1991, to shareholders on the Register of Members at close of business on 26th April 1991. The total dividend for the year of 26.75p per share (1989 equivalent 25.0p per share) will cost £115.8m (1989 £106.5m). The Directors propose to offer ordinary shareholders the opportunity to receive fully paid ordinary shares in the Company in lieu of the cash dividend.

Net Assets

The net asset value of the group at the end of 1990 was £1.43m (1989 £2.552m).

General Accident plc

World Headquarters: Pitheavlis, Perth, Scotland PH2 0NH.

Clive Gilchrist: wants 'real' non-executives

Modwen suffers 60% fall

AS PROPERTY sales fell and interest costs rose, pre-tax profits at St Modwen Properties fell 60 per cent to £4.65 million in the year to end-November (Matthew Road writes).

The Midlands group's £2.1 million of extraordinary provisions reduced the attributable profits to £632,000. Most of this will be required to pay the final dividend a share, cut to 0.5p (1.4p).

The provision has been taken after the company disposed of a 50 per cent interest in Allied Investment and Property Holdings and covers a £2.5 million loan to AIPH and a pension fund surplus. Earnings are just under 100 percent.

STOCK MARKET

Share prices squeezed higher

NEWS of the cut in bank base rates, which had been widely anticipated, made little impression on share prices. But a firm start to trading on Wall Street and an absence of sellers in London continued to squeeze prices higher.

The FT-SE 100 index ended at its best level of the day, 25.8 higher at 2,348.0. The FT index of 30 shares climbed 22.8 to 1,877.8 on a volume of 603 million shares. Share prices finished at their highest levels since July 25. Government securities saw falls of 2½p reduced to 3½ at the longer end in thin trading.

One New York securities house is taking a bullish view of London's long-term prospects. This securities house sold £200 million worth of bonds then bought 2,000 contracts in the futures market.

ICI held steady at 99p ahead of its full-year figures today. Analysts are forecasting a drop in pre-tax profits from £1.5 billion to £950 million. But the final dividend is expected to be maintained.

Glaxo, also reporting today, is expected to show a small downturn in profits to £580 million as sales of Zantac, its best-selling, anti-ulcer drug decline.

Full-year figures from Commercial Union were far worse than most market forecasts, but the increase in the final dividend lifted the shares 4p to 520p. Pre-tax profits collapsed from £150.5 million to £14 million after underwriting losses soared from £8.1 million to £145.5 million. CU blamed last year's storms, claims for subsidence and increased competition. It is issuing a warning that premiums would have to rise.

Figures from CU's rival, General Accident, also made grim reading and the shares slipped 8p to 543p. Sea Alliance eased 1p to 362p while will benefit from the cut in interest rates and the rebuilding of Kuwait spurred prices. Amer rose 5p to 249p. Burtell Developments 2p to 84p. Belfrey 5p to 233p. Berkeley Group 15p to 299p. Henry Boot 8p to 303p. Costain 3p to 216p. RM Douglas 3p to 450p. Elgiss and Hill 4p to 320p. YJ Lovell 9p to 162p. Alfred McAlpine 5p to 261p. Taylor Woodrow 23p to 285p. and Westbury 3p to 190p.

Clintec Cards, the greeting cards retailer, advanced by another 2p to a peak of 274p making a two-day gain of 37p. Selective buying ahead of next Tuesday's preliminary results found the market short of stock. Analysts expect pre-tax profits for the year to end-November to reach £2 million compared with £3.4 million.

Red hopes boosted next by a 3p rise to 40p. Vantage, the financial mail order group, continued adding to its holdings.

The chairman's recovery of the group's profits from a 1989 loss of £1.2 million to a 1990 profit of £1.2 million was a key factor in the share price rise. The chairman's recovery of the group's profits from a 1989 loss of £1.2 million to a 1990 profit of £1.2 million was a key factor in the share price rise.

Hope that British building and construction companies

MAJOR INDICES

New York:
Dow Jones	2998.80	(+25.00)
S&P Composite	357.18	(+4.37)
Tokyo:
Nikkei Average	26094.25	(+188.71)
Hong Kong:
Hang Seng	3512.79	(+18.64)
FT-SE 100	2348.00	(+25.80)
FT-SE 250	1877.80	(+22.80)
Sydney:	AO	1390.4
Frankfurt:	DAX	1065.52
Paris:	CAC	465.85
Zurich:	SIX	3405.5
London:
FT-SE 100	2348.00	(+25.80)
FT-SE 250	1877.80	(+22.80)
FT-SE 100	2348.00	(+25.80)
FT-SE 250	1877.80	(+22.80)

FT-SE 100 VOLUMES

Vol '000	Vol '000	Vol '000	Vol '000
Abbey Nat	2,079	LAG	1,111
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577
Adia-Lyons	2,148	Lloyds	5,577

WALL STREET

Feb 27	Feb 28	Feb 27	Feb 28	Feb 27	Feb 28
midday	close	midday	close	midday	close
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75
Abacus Lab	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75	48.75

Dow gain cut to one point

NEW YORK held firm at mid-morning, but blue chips lost most of their opening gains and were fluctuating near Tuesday's close.

The Dow Jones industrial average was one point higher at 2,865.6 after rising by as much as 10 points. Some investors bought because of Tuesday's weakness - when the Dow average fell 23 points - but profit-taking kept a lid on prices.

● Tokyo - Prices closed easier after falls on Wall Street on Tuesday. The Nikkei index was down 188.71 points, or 0.72 per cent, to 26,094.25.

Brokers said trading was slow because the approach of the end of the Gulf war had erased immediate buying incentives, leaving investors to take profits and to worry about postwar economic conditions. Turnover was a light 500 million shares, compared with a billion shares on Tuesday.

● Frankfurt - Scattered sharp rises helped the market to recover from early lows and end 0.5 per cent higher. The Dax index ended 7.28 points higher at 1,565.52.

● Singapore - Shares closed firmer on renewed buying. The Straits Times industrial index recovered 10.57 points to close at 1,443.35. It lost 9.17 points in the first half-hour when prices fell on profit-taking.

● Hong Kong - Prices ended lower on a technical correction and small investors took profits following Wall Street's fall on Tuesday and Tokyo's drop yesterday.

The Hang Seng index eased 19.64 points to 3,512.79, while the Hong Kong index fell 13.19 points to 2,303.03.

● Sydney - Sobering company profit announcements and the slump on Wall Street on Tuesday depressed prices here and the market closed sharply lower.

The All-Ordinaries index ended 23 points, or 1.6 per cent, lower at 1,390.4.

Standard Chartered

Base Rate

On and after 27th February, 1991

Standard Chartered Bank's Base Rate for lending is being decreased from 13.50% to 13.00%

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

Standard Chartered Bank

Head Office: 1 Aldermanbury Square, London, EC2V 7BS

Tel 071 280 7500 - Telex 885951

[illegible]

MONEY MARKETS

Exchange index compared with 1955 was down at 93.8 (day's range 93.8-94.0)

1989/91						1990/91						1991/92
High	Low	Company	Ind	Price	Yld	High	Low	Company	Ind	Price	Yld	High	Low	Company	Ind	Price	Yld
				Offer	Chgs	de					Offer	Chgs	de
74	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
75	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
76	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
77	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
78	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
79	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
80	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
81	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
82	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
83	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
84	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
85	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
86	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
87	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
88	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
89	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
90	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
91	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
92	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
93	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
94	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
95	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
96	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
97	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
98	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
99	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
100	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
101	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
102	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
103	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
104	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
105	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
106	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
107	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
108	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
109	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
110	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
111	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
112	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
113	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
114	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
115	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
116	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
117	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
118	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
119	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
120	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
121	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
122	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
123	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
124	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
125	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
126	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
127	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
128	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
129	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
130	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
131	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
132	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
133	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
134	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
135	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
136	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
137	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
138	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
139	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
140	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
141	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
142	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
143	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
144	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
145	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
146	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
147	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
148	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
149	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
150	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
151	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
152	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
153	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
154	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
155	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
156	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
157	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
158	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
159	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
160	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120	120	120	120
161	11	ABB	Elect	112	112	112	120

Exchange index compared with 1985 was down at 93.8 (day's range 93.9-94.0).

STERLING SPOT AND FORWARD RATES

Sterling Rates for Feb 27		Range	Close	1 month	3 month
New York	1.5125-1.5215	1.5185-1.5185	1.041-1.050	2.80-2.85p
Moscow	2.1198-2.2218	2.2018-2.2208	97.1-1.05p	1.10-1.12p
Amsterdam	3.980-3.990	3.982-3.990	81-82p	81-82p
Brussels	58.82-80.34	58.82-80.34	22-19p	85-91p
Copenhagen	11.646-11.2504	11.646-11.2506	38-39p	75-77p
Dublin	1.071-1.075	1.069-1.074	28-29p	80-82p
Frankfurt	2.9158-2.9258	2.9158-2.9156	11-10p	81-82p
London	853.1-853.99	853.1-853.99	15-20p	122-133p
Madrid	11.11-11.12	11.11-11.12	10-10p	80-82p
Milano	11.512-11.4903	11.512-11.2717	14-14p	81-82p
Oslo	17.3553-11.2851	17.3553-11.4181	38-39p	81-82p
Paris	3.91-3.9553	3.905-3.915	91-92p	81-82p
Stockholm	10.6148-10.8811	10.6148-10.8897	11-11p	81-82p
Tokyo	23.55-23.57	23.55-23.57	10-10p	81-82p
Zurich	20.4505-20.5025	20.4505-20.5104	8-7p	201-172p
	2.5134-2.5262	2.5170-2.5202	11-11p	81-82p

Source: Bial. Premium = ar. Discount = ds.

MONEY RATES (%)

Base Rates: Clearing Banks 15	Finance Hse 14
Discount Window Loans Ongoing rate: 12%	10-15	Week End: 13%
Treasury Bills (Maturity): 2 1/2% 12 m; 5 1/2% 18 m; 8 1/2% 24 m; 12 1/2% 36 m; 11 1/2% 48 m

	12m	18m	24m	36m	48m
Prime Bank Bill (12m)	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	11 1/2%-11 1/2%
Three Month (12m)	12 1/2%	12 1/2%	12
Interbank:	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	11 1/2%-11 1/2%
Overnight open 14	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	12 1/2%-12 1/2%	11 1/2%-11 1/2%
Local Authority Depos:	12 1/2%	12 1/2%	12 1/2%	11 1/2%	11 1/2%
Banking Cash:	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	11 1/2%-11 1/2%
Building Society Cash:	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	10 1/2%-11 1/2%	11 1/2%-11 1/2%

EUROPEAN MONEY DEPOSITS (%)

	7 day	1 mth	3 mth	6 mth	Call
Dollar:	8 1/2-8	7 1/2-8 1/2	6 1/2-8 1/2	6 1/2-8 1/2	6 1/2-8 1/2
Swiss Franc:	9 1/2-9	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2
French Franc:	9 1/2-9	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2
Swiss Franc:	9 1/2-9	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2
Yen:	9 1/2-9	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2	8 1/2-9 1/2

GOLD AND PRECIOUS METALS (Barrel & Co)

Bullion: Open $320.25-320.75	Close: $350.00-350.30	High: $360.00-361.40
Low: $320.40-320.80
Sovereigns: Gold $350.00-350.40	Silver $282.00-283.00	Gold $350.00-350.40
Platinum: $350.00-350.30	Silver $282.00-283.00	Gold $350.00-350.40

OTHER STERLING RATES

Argentina austral*	1.6727-1.6737
Australia dollar	2.4405-2.4416
Bahrain dinar	4.767-4.768
Canadian dollar	0.63-0.64
Cyprus pound	0.083-0.084
French franc	6.55-6.56
German drachm	3.12-3.13
Hong Kong dollar	14.0094-14.0162
Indian rupee	98.36-98.76
Italian Lira	369.7-370.0
Malaysian ringgit	1.1957-1.2004
Mexican peso	16.50-16.75
New Zealand dollar	1.9309-1.9360
Saudi Arabia riyal	3.2098-3.2147
South African rand	0.6073-0.6125
S. Africa rand (fin)	4.8087-4.

COMMODITIES

[illegible][illegible]

GOLF

Richardson rejects the mechanical Faldo philosophy

FROM MITCHELL PLATT'S
GOLF CORRESPONDENT
NICE

THE advancement of Steve Richardson as a serious contender for a place in the next European Ryder Cup team owes as much to his background as it does to his success in the Girona Open last Sunday.

As a result, Richardson moves into the Mediterranean Open, starting here today on the Estrel-Lantides course, well aware of the burden he must carry during the coming months.

Within 24 hours of his success, the plaudits began, with, among others, an Wooman, who emerges here from his self-imposed winter recess, suggesting that Richardson's rising star will, in the future, burn as brightly as those of Ballesteros, Faldo and Lyle.

If it does, then Richardson will owe much to his father, John, the professional at Le-on-the-Solent, and to his upbringing. From an early age, his father impressed on him the importance of not "bashing his way, but thinking his way, round the golf course".

At the age of 11, Richardson was winning club competitions, but more important, he already possessed the professional outlook. Yet

Card of the course

Hole	Yds	Par	Hole	Yds	Par
1	373	4	10	410	4
2	387	4	11	353	3
3	387	4	12	154	3
4	387	4	13	353	3
5	500	5	14	139	3
6	453	4	15	454	4
7	453	4	16	454	4
8	321	3	17	321	3
9	321	3	18	321	3

Out: 3,360 36 In: 3,212 36

Total yardage: 6,572 Pts: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

Par: 71

● RACING 31
● GOLF 32
● CRICKET 33

SPORT

Dalglish spared further anxiety by US decision

By OUR SPORTS STAFF

THE stress that forced Kenny Dalglish into premature retirement will not be increased by any overture from the US Soccer Federation (USSF). While Dalglish's contemporary, Johan Cruyff, was recovering yesterday in a Spanish hospital following a mild heart attack — induced possibly by similar pressure to that which has forced Liverpool to search for a new manager — the USSF was announcing its intentions.

Both Dalglish and Franz Beckenbauer have been ruled out as possible successors to Bob Gansler as coach for the United States team, according to the USSF president, Alan Rothenberg. Gansler departed on Saturday, two days after the Americans had failed to score for the sixth successive match.

The favourite for the job of coaching the 1994 World Cup hosts is now Bora Milutinovic, the Yugoslav who coached Mexico at the 1986 World Cup and Costa Rica in the 1990 event, since when he has been out of work. Before that he had coached Pumas to two Mexican League titles. He is fluent in Spanish, French, Russian and Serbo-Croatian and also speaks some English.

Beckenbauer, who coached West Germany to the World Cup title last summer, was thought to be the ideal choice, since he was an illustrious member of the New York Cosmos after leading West Germany to the 1974 World Cup title. Now technical director of Marseilles in France, the Kaiser was expected to become a consultant to the 1994 World Cup organizing committee. "But we never talked to him about coaching," Rothenberg said.

"That was never part of the equation. I don't think that's his best use. It's one thing to coach a national team like the Germans, where everything is organized and compressed and there's so much history. But it's another thing to come to our programme."

Dalglish, who managed Liverpool to Football League titles in 1988 and 1990, became available last Friday when he handed in his resignation, complaining of the pressure of the job. Gansler's subsequent exit fuelled speculation that the US had their successor lined up, only for the rumours to be dismissed by Rothenberg. "No, he's not a possibility," he said. Rothenberg will appoint the new coach, but a seven-man committee will narrow the field. John Kowalski, the coach of Robert Morris College and the US indoor team, will coach the national team on an interim basis.

The news from Barcelona might make Dalglish feel he is well out of the American post or any other for the time being. At nearly 40, the Scot is only three years younger than Cruyff, who had gone to the San Jordi surgical centre clinic on Tuesday complaining of chest pains. The Dutchman, who is in his third season as coach to Barcelona, was said yesterday to be suffering from "acute coronary insufficiency". He was undergoing a series of tests.

Barcelona are top of their league — just as Liverpool were when Dalglish surprised the football world by calling it a day. Success was clearly no escape from the intense pressure that has now caught up the three-time European Footballer of the Year who captained Netherlands to the World Cup final in 1974 and collected three European Cup winners' medals with Ajax from 1971-3.

Like Dalglish, who chose not to play for Scotland in the 1986 World Cup finals, Cruyff had opted out of the climax to the 1978 competition in Argentina because of the pressures. And only this week he was saying: "There is a time when you have been under a microscope and under pressure for 15 years and the stress begins to tell."

"It's at that moment that you realise you are struggling to sleep in the evenings and that the pressure is starting to affect your family. That is the moment to go."

He almost did so last season, which was so disappointing — relatively — that his future was in doubt. But Barcelona's revival — which has made them favourites to regain the league title from Real Madrid — brought Cruyff the offer of a new two-year contract, which he signed.

Golfer who chipped in for charity

All in a good cause: Greg Norman, of Australia, recently deposed as the world's No. 1 golfer by Nick Faldo, of Britain, follows the rule of thumb and the eagle-sharp eye at the 14th green in the Skins match at the Doral Country Club in Miami yesterday. At the 18th, he won $100,000 after a chip-off against Jack Nicklaus, Ray Floyd and Seve Ballesteros, and donated the money to charity.

Fallen idol Warnapura puts past behind him

FROM RICHARD STREETON IN KATUNAYAKA, SRI LANKA

BUNDULA Warnapura was a national cricketing idol in Sri Lanka nine years ago, when he captained his country in their inaugural Test match against England.

Later in the same year, Warnapura and his teammates incurred a 25-year ban from the Sri Lankan board from all cricket when he led an unofficial Sri Lankan side to South Africa. In his case, the ban was not finally lifted until last year and he was able to return to local club cricket. He saw his choice last weekend as an adjudicator as final acceptance by the board that the past was buried.

The future in Colombo when the Sri Lankans secretly left for South Africa was even greater, relatively, than in England when Gooch's party had earlier done the same thing.

Most of the players were dismissed from their jobs, and in South Africa their form proved so disappointing that a contracted second tour was cancelled. They learned about the 25-year ban two days before their opening fixture and for a long time could not accept that its severity was fact.

Once the initial shock passed, the players became resigned. On returning home they encountered little hostility from friends and even a measure of sympathy once it was realised that the English rebels were banned from Test cricket for only three years and could continue with their countries.

"When cricket has been your whole life, it is a shattering experience not to be allowed to have anything to do with the game, be it at your club or even your children's school matches," Warnapura said. He even stopped attending matches as a spectator in case there were any incidents.

Warnapura admitted that he regretted his South African venture and would not go if he could turn back the clock. "My case was different from the others in several ways," he said. "I had a good job and the money was not the only reason I went. Generally, it was a harrowing experience and the mental anxiety and churning in my mind that it brought simply was not worth it."

Early in 1989, the International Cricket Conference, as it then was, introduced its own disciplinary code on players guilty of sporting contact with South Africa, and the Sri Lankan board made its first concession to the banned players. Twelve of the 14 could resume playing, but they could not be involved in the game's administration or management and were ineligible for representative selection.

Warnapura and Tony Opatha, the tour organiser, whose cricket has always been played professionally in The Netherlands, were the exceptions because they were in South Africa attending cricket centenary celebrations.

Appeals by the pair to the authorities were unanswered until it was established that they had not played cricket during their visit. The ministry of sport set up a commission, meanwhile, to investigate the Sri Lankan board and its workings since 1981. The ministry finally ruled that the lingering ban was not justified and should be lifted unconditionally for all 14 and that "natural justice had not prevailed".

Warnapura, now aged 38, used to open the batting for his country but now bats at No. 9 and believes at least four youngsters he is bringing on could be future Test players. He has become an expert preparer of pitches, has qualified as an umpire and holds the ambition to stand in Test matches within the next three years. He was recently the match adjudicator for one of the one-day matches against England A.

"The ICC's independent panel has provided an incentive," he said. "Former players have every advantage as umpires. To stand as an umpire in a Test is now my remaining ambition." Should he fulfil this, it would complete one of the game's more unusual careers.

ANC helps in unification of SA rugby

FROM RAY KENNEDY IN JOHANNESBURG

THE African National Congress has taken the lead in unifying the administration of rugby union in South Africa in a move which is expected to accelerate its readmittance to international competition.

Talks in Cape Town yesterday resulted in agreement to set a deadline of October 31 for the formation of a single non-political and non-racial controlling body. A steering committee has been formed to draft its constitution.

While the deadline also indicates that the chances of a foreign tour in the coming season are remote, it does allow the International Rugby Football Board (IRFB), which organises the World Cup, the chance to announce South Africa as possible hosts for the 1995 event.

The white South African Rugby Board (Sarb) had hoped that unity could be achieved by April 1, the start of the rugby season in South Africa, before its negotiations with the mainly Coloured (mixed race) South African Rugby Union (Saru) broke down earlier this year.

Dr Danie Craven, president of Sarb, who initiated unity talks in the first place, and Ebrahim Patel, president of Saru, will serve on the committee. The new controlling body has been provisionally named the South African Rugby Football Union.

All existing controlling bodies will be disbanded to form a single organisation and all clubs will be open to all players, regardless of colour.

Most importantly, the steering committee was charged to disseminate the ideals of rugby at grass root level, which means that schools, which have been unwilling to entertain the notion of mixed sport will have to think again.

The government has introduced a complicated formula whereby school parent-teacher committees can decide whether to go multi-racial, but only a few hundred previously-white schools have so far voted to admit black pupils.

In Paris, the head of the French Rugby Federation, Albert Ferrasse, welcomed the merger of the two rugby bodies. "It will enable rugby to come out of its isolation and, given the importance of sport in South Africa, it will also be a help in destroying apartheid," he said.

Hudson proposes random testing

By PETER BILLS

RUGBY union authorities should instigate immediate random spot checks to ensure any drug problem is banished from the sport before it takes a hold, according to Tom Hudson, director of physical education and sports development at Bath University, and a former fitness adviser to the Llanelli and Bath rugby clubs.

Hudson says that testing must be widespread and the practice of taking tests only after matches. His plea comes in the wake of the two-year suspension imposed on Richard Griffiths, the Wales B player who tested positive last month.

Hudson said: "What is needed is stricter testing of rugby union players more often. Players are tested only after games, but if you have a clever coach or fitness adviser who wants to break the rules, he can provide drugs which mask the effects of banned substances or even take a player off certain drugs in time."

He warned that the opening of doors to financial benefit for players in the game may tempt more to experiment with drugs.

"Players should be subjected to spot checks at training sessions because then they would not know when and where the next test would be. As the game gets a higher profile and finances become a factor, there will be more problems of this nature."

"I know there has been the suspicion in a number of union clubs that drugs were being taken by certain players but until now there has never been the hard evidence. We must make sure there is no expansion of this problem."

From his professional involvement at the university with young sportsmen generally, Hudson recognises that the supply of drugs has never been easier.

Oxford survive, page 32

Bailey may drive for Lotus as stand-in

By NORMAN HOWELL

JULIAN Bailey, of Britain, is on the verge of making a surprise return to Formula One motor racing for Lotus at the inaugural race of the new season in Phoenix on Sunday week.

Bailey has been testing the Lotus-Judd at Silverstone and is expected to sign a contract as stand-in driver for Martin Donnelly, who was badly injured in a crash last year. Johnny Herbert, who deputised for Donnelly in the last two races last season, was favoured to drive for Lotus alongside Mika Hakkinen, of Finland, until Donnelly recovered.

But Herbert, who is in Japan preparing for the Formula 3000 series there, has been unable to raise the money, an important point since Lotus, after losing Camel sponsorship at the end of last season, have had to look carefully at finances. Bailey is thought to be able to bring some money to the team.

Peter Collins, the managing director of Lotus, would not be drawn on which of the two drivers would be selected.

"The decision will be taken in the next 24 to 48 hours, but we are very much dependent on what our sponsors want," he said.

It is felt that Collins, who started in Formula One in 1978 at Lotus, before moving to Williams and then to Benetton, would like to favour Herbert, whom he introduced to grand prix racing two years ago in the Benetton, but that Bailey's money may swing the balance. Bailey raced in Formula One with Tyrrell before competing for the last two years with Nissan in the sportscar championship.

Bailey would be a popular choice with spectators as he is that rare breed who seems to be in Formula One because it is fun.

FA has little to show for success

By DENNIS SIGBY

DESPITE receiving the biggest merit payment ever to a country playing in the World Cup, England is left with only £128,000 profit from the £2.1 million net receipts received from Fifa, the world football governing body, for finishing in fourth place in last year's tournament in Italy.

This figure, lower than anticipated, was presented to the Football Association's finance committee yesterday. The breakdown of where the money went has not yet been revealed; the Football League, due to receive 25 per cent of the total, will await the figures with particular interest.

With England receiving as much as West Germany, the champions, since both played seven matches in the final stages, a cheque for £32,000 to the Football League will be regarded at Lytham St Annes as disappointing. It is less than Tottenham Hotspur pay in interest charges each week.

A big part of England's expenditure went on the massive security operation. Another cost was the establishment by the FA of a travel club to oversee the distribution of tickets to supporters. Money was lost on the tickets and in providing facilities and staff to administer their distribution.

England's success in Italy also cost the FA almost £1 million in extra bonuses for the players. Those who appeared in all matches are believed to have earned around £75,000.

The FA incurred higher travel costs than most countries as there was a three-week acclimatization period in Sardinia and an interest in the competition until the third weekend. The FA also incurred the cost of having more than 50 of its councillors in Italy for the latter stages of the tournament.

Platt wants Italian future

By CHRIS MOORE

DAVID Platt, the Aston Villa midfielder player, is the latest England international to confirm that his long-term future is likely to lie abroad. More specifically, Platt has expressed an interest in playing in Italy, where he came of age as an England player during last year's World Cup finals.

"I would eventually like the idea of pitting myself against the best players in the world every week," Platt said. "If I was 27 now, I would be saying yes to Italy. I believe a move there would benefit my career."

"They have the best players. They pay the most money, more people watch them and the stadiums are better than anywhere else in the world."

However, Doug Ellis, the Villa chairman, yesterday pledged to do everything possible to keep Platt at Villa Park after his contract expires in 1993.

"Obviously, you build a team around certain players and you always want to keep them and add to that team. That is exactly what we are trying to do at Villa," Ellis said. "We have David Platt under contract for another two-and-a-half years. We intend that he should stay at Villa for at least that long, and longer if possible."

Platt is Villa's top scorer this season with 17 goals, although he has been out of action for the last six weeks while struggling to shake off a groin injury.

He resumed training this week, but it is unlikely that he will be rushed straight back into the side for Saturday's visit to Sheffield United.

● The Leeds United left back, Peter Haddock, has been ruled out for the rest of the season after a knee-ligament operation. Haddock was carried off during his side's Rumbelows League Cup semi-final defeat by Manchester United at Elland Road on Sunday.

● Andy Thomas, the leading scorer for Plymouth Argyle this season, has been forced to end his playing career. Thomas, aged 28, has been sidelined by a back problem since October. He scored eight goals in 16 games at the start of the season.

BANK OF SCOTLAND BASE RATE

Bank of Scotland announces that with effect from Thursday 28th February 1991 its Base Rate has been decreased from 13.5% per annum to 13.0% per annum.

BANK OF SCOTLAND
A FRIEND FOR LIFE

Long decline in small-boat racing is reversed

By BARRY PICKTHALL

THE tide appears to have turned for dinghy sailors after a decade-long decline in small-boat racing. According to the Royal Yachting Association (RYA), which expects a record number of enthusiasts to make the pilgrimage to Crystal Palace this weekend for the annual Sailboat Exhibition, fleet numbers are showing a remarkable increase across the country.

Entries for several class championships are expected to nudge, and in the case of the Dart 18 and Laser classes, exceed the 200 mark — a number not witnessed since the heady dinghy days of the late Seventies.

This welcome increase is in

COMMENT

marked contrast to the world of offshore yacht racing, which is witnessing a marked decline, partially because of the recession but principally because of a general dislike for the extreme and costly yachts encouraged by the International Offshore Rule.

This year's Champagne Mumm Admiral's Cup event at Cowes, offshore racing's equivalent of a world championship, has attracted only nine countries against 19 national teams which competed in the 1975, '77 and '79 events.

Enrolments in the RYA's national dinghy tuition scheme also show a marked increase. During the past three years, numbers passing the introductory course have grown from 14,376 to 36,400. The increase is even more remarkable among improvers and advanced students, up three-and-a-half fold from 4,800 to 17,720.

A high percentage of those learning the ropes are children, for whom the RYA operates a special Young Opportunity scheme. This was introduced five years ago and involves several six-strong fleets of Optimist trainers which are available for hire with an instructor to schools and clubs in every region of the United Kingdom.

As a result, interest in this junior class has blossomed with numbers at the national championship doubling from 102 in 1986 to 223 in 1989. The Jack Holt-designed Cadet primer has also enjoyed a similar revival, with entries for its championship climbing from 103 to 160 over the past four years.

Catamarans, this year's theme at Sailboat '91, is showing the biggest growth among dinghy classes. According to Peter Ewing, the first Dart 18 world championship taking place at Abersoch in July, which has a limited entry of 250 boats, is already well over-subscribed. There have been 204 entries from the UK alone, 40 of which have had to be declined to make way for foreign contestants.

Rivalling the Dart for the top championship turnout this year will be the Laser class, which now numbers 140,000 worldwide. The class national championship at Mumbles in August could reach 300, 50 more than last year's record figure.

Last season this popular one-design class topped the championship league, ahead of the Optimist, Cadet, Fireball (133), Enterprise (130), Dart (120), Topper (126) and Lark (121), which made a welcome return to the 100 plus group for the first time since 1975.